Smith's Good L[illegible]

I was always a lucky [illegible] most fortunate thing [illegible] pened to me was being [illegible] Listen.

Three years ago I had [illegible] ed, and out of money. [illegible] sound locky; but it was [illegible] the best of luck. I good-[illegible] to go down to Plymouth, to my uncle's house—partly that the mountain air might soothe my invalid [illegible] tion, and partly to save a month's board.

I stepped on board its early down train. It was full of city six o'clock passengers, mostly men, [illegible] shining on the water, [illegible] hugging the banks, and clinging to the burnished surface of the tide. I suppose a poet could have made something pretty out of the sight, but I only wrapped myself closer in my overcoat, and looked at it sulkily. After a while I got listening to two men who sat behind me.

"A pretty girl with a fortune isn't always to be had for the asking."

"Oh, but the girl isn't asked, I take it. It's all arranged by her aunts, and she's acquiesce. She's shining pretty, but a mere child—not sixteen, I believe. They had another fellow booked for her, but he died in New Orleans of the yellow fever last fall."

"And she's never seen this Smith?"

"Nay nor they either. The aunts plotted with Mr. Dunbar, the guardian, and he picked [illegible] for them. They were, but believed it was a sword and a helmet upon a piece of parchment, but it proved to be a pipe and a sword against a pallete, which was very appropriate, as there had been scholars, artists, and military men among our ancestors.

"All well?" I asked good-naturedly.

"All well," answered Sambo with a [illegible] shutting the door. "Then he [illegible] to see you a grin.

"Very early, very early indeed, sah. Very early, and yet counting every day, it was certainly worth remembering." I laughed a little and Sambo shoved and again and jumped upon his seat.

We rattled through the streets under an arch, up an avenue. Things began to look strange.

"Where arrive?" I asked as Sambo opened the carriage door. "Do they live here?"

"Yes, Mr. Here's Mr. Dunbar, sir."

At the same moment an elderly gentleman rushed out to the terrace to meet me.

"Why, Smith, you are wonderfully late," he explained, shaking hands with me.

"The cars ran off the track," I answered before I could say anything else he hustled me into the house.

"Everything ready. Hurry with your toilet and some down. Pity you trimmed your whiskers so close; it alters your appearance very much. Robert, help Mr. Smith dress. Light in here, Smith. Hurry now, the ladies are waiting."

I found myself in a luxurious dressing-room, and a mulatto was respectfully in attendance. I sat down and looked at him.

"What is your name?"

"Robert, sir. Will you be so kind as to hurry, sir? They are waiting for you."

I gave him the key to my [illegible] and resigned myself to my fate. [illegible] I asked, as [illegible] ed my gar[illegible] with the reluctance of [illegible]

HASTE NOT, REST NOT.

FROM THE GERMAN OF GOETHE.

Without haste, without rest
Bind the motto of life to your breast;
Bear it with thee as a spell;
Storm and sunshine guard it well!
Heed not flowers that round thee bloom;
Bear it onward still to doom.

Haste and let no thought thee lead
Aught for aye the spirits need;
Thou art well and knew the spell,
Spurned alike with all thy rebel!
Haste not! rest not! conflict ever
For one meritous action done;

Rest not! life is toiling time enough;
There will be work and weeping
Haste not! rest not! calm delight
Hovers only o'er the grave.

Haste not! rest not! conflict ever,
Strive and date before you fall;
Something mighty and sublime
Leave behind and conquer time!
Glittering time-flies for aye,
But these forms have passed away.

Haste not! rest not! calmly wait,
Meekly bear the storms of fate!
Duty be thy proper guide—
Be the right winder beside!
Haste not! rest not! conflict ever,
God shall crown thy work at last.

Noble Exemplar.

At the hazard of offending a nice sense of delicacy on the part of those to whom reference is made, we are constrained to tell a story. Let us premise by saying that it is absolutely true. A few years ago a large drug firm in this city advertised for a boy. Next day the store was thronged with applicants, among them, a queer looking little fellow, accompanied by a woman, who proved to be his aunt, in lieu of faithless parents, by whom he had been shiftless. Looking at this little waif, the merchant in the store promptly said, "Can't take him; places all full; besides, he is too small." "I know he is small," said the woman, "but he is willing and faithful." There was a twinkle in the boy's eyes, which made the merchant think again. A partner in the firm volunteered to remark that he did not see what they wanted of such a boy—he was bigger than a pint of cider." The after consultation the boy was set to work. A few days later a call was made on the boys in the store for some one to stay all night. The prompt response of the little fellow contrasted well with the reluctance of the

A Remarkable Spring.

[From the Lansing (Mich.) Republican.]

In attempting to bore a salt well at St. Louis, Gratiot county, in this State, a spring of fresh water was tapped at a depth of a little more than two hundred feet, which throws out [illegible] the rate of two hundred [illegible] minute. This water is [illegible] distant above the [illegible] first thought of the [illegible] village was, that it [illegible] obtaining a salt well, [illegible] the cause of [illegible] cold water for all [illegible] its healing qualities we [illegible] accidentally. Three [illegible] stopping for a day at [illegible] dew to the spring, and finding the water cold, it was proposed that each should fold his hand in the water, to test the question of physical endurance. One of the party had long suffered from rheumatism, and had been unable to open his hand for many years.

This hand was placed in the water, and when compelled, after some moments, to withdraw it, he was able to straightenhis fingers, and he exclaimed—"My God! I can open my hand, and have not done it before for ten years."

This marvelous healing caused great excitement among the inhabitants, and further experiments proved that the water was filled with electricity of galvanism. Knife blades held in the current flowing from the pipe, became sufficiently magnetized in five minutes to lift a ten-penny nail, and retain the power as if imparted from a loadstone.

The news of its medical properties spread far and wide, and those suffering from chronic rheumatism and neuralgic diseases came to drink, and found restored health from the waters. The analysis of Professor Duffield, of Detroit, proved the truth of the assertion that the waters were charged with electricity. Previous [illegible] for the accommodation
