Still True

It coal happened to be the only practical source of heat and energy, currently high and rising labor costs would make little difference. The public would have to keep on buying coal for lack of a substitute.

But that isn't the case. Coal is solid in competition with other energy fuels, such as oil and natural gas. Coal's labor costs are far higher than those in the industries with which it competes. The result has been a loss of markets, and the threatened loss of more.

Here is a hard fact which, the coal miners might think about, even if their leaders disregard it. A high wage scale, or any other employe benefit, is meaningless unless jobs continue to exist. The policy of the United Mine Workers has been to demand more and more money for less and less productive work—The actual working day in the mines now is only about 6½ hours. And, on top of that, the industry has been plagued with sensless, unjustified strikes and shutdown which have cost both miners and operators huge sums.

The miners, like anyone else, naturally want to make as much money as possible. High wages along with a high rate of employment can only be maintained if worker productivity is sufficient to keep coal in a reasonable price relationship with the other fuels. It all comes back to the "da's work for a da's pay idea." Once that truism is forgotten, in coal or anything else, we're heading for disaster.

Mike: "'Tis a foine lad you have there. Could you lend me $5?"
Pat: "No. 'Tis my wife's by her first husband."

Legal Tax Evasion

President Truman has again spoken out in favor of increasing government income through higher taxes. In an article in the New York Times, Godfrey N. Nelson observes, "There is at least one means by which the Federal government could not only stimulate competitive business but could derive very substantial revenues. Tax the income of all businesses conducted for profit, both public and private, eliminate tax exemptions, irrespective of kind of ownership or form of organization.

"Cooperatives and their owners, for example, should be taxed like ordinary business corporations on their entire earnings, and on distributions made out of earnings."

In this connection, Representative Noah Mason has proposed a bill designed to tax businesses of this kind, including government-owned enterprises "operating on taxpayers' money, generally paying no interest . . . . nrs paying no taxes on their earnings even though they compete directly with privately-owned companies."

The government power developments, including the rural electric cooperatives, are perfect examples of the last type of business. In effect, all the taxpayers of the country are subsidizing the electric bills of a favored few. The loss of the tax revenue that private utilities would pay on the same volume of business is a body blow to states and municipalities, and all the taxpayers must kick in to make up the deficit.

The legal tax evasion now going on is indefensible. Mr. Mason's bill seems to be the answer to a problem which has become critical.

Candidates Named For UK Alumni Post

Alumni of the University of Kentucky have named three of their number as candidates for the position of alumni member of the U. K. Board of Trustees, it was announced last week. These were nominated for the post in an election conducted by mail were A. B. Chandler of Versailles, Mrs. Jeze Beam of Louisville, and Herndon Evans of Pineville. Names of the three alumni will be submitted to Governor Earle C. Clements who will appoint the new member to succeed T. H. Cutler of Frankfort whose term expires December 31.

Leaders of homemakers clubs in Greenup county who learned how to make leather gloves will relay the information to other members.

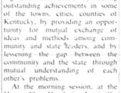
Chester Cole of Clinton county used coke for the first time this year, and thereby saved a barn of good tobacco.



January 26 is going to be the day of all days for the Committee for Kentucky.

That day will see the largest gathering ever held of local and state leaders striving to make Kentucky fulfill her destiny as one of the great states of the Union.

Accent is going to be on civic endeavor in communities. The objectives of the conference are to stimulate citizen interest in building better communities by hearing outstanding achievements in some of the towns, cities, counties of Kentucky, by providing an opportunity for mutual exchange of ideas and methods among community and state leaders, and by lowering the gap between the community and the state through mutual understanding of each other's problems.

At the morning session, at the Henry Clay Hotel in Louisville, eleven notables—including state officials, civitate officials, and leaders in commercial development—will outline resources and services available to local organizations through their particular agencies. This is to emphasize to local people what they can expect from statewide organizations.

There will be sitcents or more community leaders to listen to the morning program, as well as a good many editors attending the annual convention of the Kentucky Press Association. The entire membership of the KPA are to be guests of the Committee until 10 P. M. In the afternoon community leaders will tell about civic achievements in their localities. After the banquet, five celebrities will speak.

Your reporter will be there if Asthma, the old jalopy, doesn't blow a gasket a long way from a service garage. President Harry Schacter adds greatly to the attractiveness of the program by setting a 15-minute limit on all speakers. This time limit probably will bring people from as far west as Hickman or Fulton and as far east as Jenkins or Louisa, people who otherwise might not attend.

All the world loves a brief public speaker.

See you in Louisville on January 26.

BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL OUTLOOK FOR 1950

By Roger W. Babson

1. The total volume of business for 1950 will be less than that of 1949, due primarily to the unfortunate labor conflicts. Considering that the innocent consumer will be the chief sufferer and will be obliged to pay the bills, it seems too bad that labor troubles should upset the applecart.

LABOR OUTLOOK.

2. Even with all the threats, there will be few wage increases during 1950. On the other hand all labor negotiations take the minds of both the employees and the management off their regular business. However these negotiations come out, they result in a loss from the standpoint of the country as a whole.

3. There will be fewer strikes in 1950 than in 1949 because they will not be fewer extended negotiations which are very expensive in themselves.

4. The Taft-Hartley Law will continue to stand throughout 1950 although many schemes for delouring this law will be devised.

5. The great drive against the big companies will be left possibly and at for sak and other benefits. These will probably be helpful to the wagearners and may aid in ironing out the business cycle, but this will be paid for by consumers.

6. It is hoped that all parties will begin to realize during 1950 that the real road to national progress is through increasing production and greater efficiency. This is the bright light we see in the labor situation.

COMMODITY PRICES

7. Movements in commodity prices during 1950 will vary with different groups of industries and of products, but altogether there will be a general lowering during 1950.

8. We, therefore, advise going easy on inventories 1950 is a time to get out of debt and stay out of debt. Speculation in commodities should be discouraged in 1950.

9. We believe that the cost of living index has turned down for the present. The average for 1950 will be less than for 1949.

10. Practically all retail prices will average less in 1950 than in 1949, notwithstanding the excess of money mentioned under 22, 23 and 29 below.

FARM OUTLOOK.

11. The total farm income for 1950 should be less than that of the average for wheat, corn, pork, poultry, eggs and certain dairy products. Farmers should diversify more in 1950, get out of debt and put their surplus money into savings, in preparation for the next crop failure.

12. The supply of certain canned vegetables and citrus fruits should be greater during 1950 than at the same time during 1949. The prices of these products should fall off, barring some weather, insect or blight calamity.

13. Poultry and dairy products will especially increase in volume during 1950 with prices averaging less than in 1949.

14. Farmers will continue to work to hold price ceilings. It is popular to criticise the vast amount of crops which the Government owns or is making loans on, but this surplus in storage may be a great blessing when the next crop failure or war comes.

TAXES

15. The Federal Budget will be increased during 1950 over that for 1949.

16. Over-all Federal Taxes will not be increased during 1950 and there may even be some readjustments to encourage venture capital. Moreover, some of the minor taxes may be eliminated or reduced.

17. The long-term capital gains tax of 25% will remain unchanged.

18. There will be many increases in local and state taxes, plus more reaching for relief by "sales" taxes or other forms of raising needed funds.

RETAIL TRADE

19. Goods on counters will be of better grade in 1950 than they were in 1949.

20. Markdown sales will continue during 1950 as consumer spending slackens due to a decline in employment and other factors.

21. The dollar value of all retail sales in 1950 will be moderately downward, and the unit volume of retail sales will also be less in 1950 than in 1949.

22. Less will be spent on new building and equipment by stores and factories during 1950.

FOREIGN TRADE

23. Our exports will be down during 1950 and our imports will be up during 1950,—comparing both with 1949. This will partly be accounted for by the devaluation of the English Pound and other foreign currencies.

24. Foreign credits will continue to be granted during 1950, but some of these will be direct by American business firms and investors. If our Government will get foreign government to agree that such investments will be exempt from any new tax or other legislation by the foreign country in which the investments are made, considerable progress would be noticeable along foreign trade channels.

25. American interests will have more competition from foreign producers of raw materials and manufactured goods during 1950 than this had during 1949. This will benefit some American consumers, but be harmful to others.

26. Fear of war with Russia will continue during 1950. World War III will come sometime, but it will not start during 1950. Hence in large industries, one should use these years of peace to get some small farm or country home to which they can go in case of war. Such places will be almost unobtainable when war actually comes.

DEFICIT FINANCING

27. The supply of credit will be increased during 1950, but the price of Government bonds will not change much one way or the other during 1950.

28. In addition to the antiquated Federal deficit the $3,000,000,000 being distributed as insurance refunds to veterans will be mostly spent.

29. Congress will not change the price of gold during 1950.

STOCK MARKET

30. Most stocks will work up and down in about the same range during 1950 as during 1949.

31. Stocks of companies with assets mostly in natural resources, shown as inflation stocks, should have the greatest demand.

32. There will be more investment buying for income during 1950 and utilities and companies making labor-saving machinery may be more popular than other industrials or railroads.

33. The wisest investors will keep a fair amount of their funds liquid throughout 1950 pending the great break in stock prices which will come someday.

BONDS

34. High-grade taxable corporate bonds bearing low coupon rates should continue at about the same prices during 1950, but of course, they will sell for much lower prices when money rates increase.

35. 1950 will see a further fading off in certain tax-exempt bonds due to the new Housing Authority Obligations to be issued during 1950.

36. The Federal Reserve will continue doing 1950 the same general policy which it followed in 1949.

37. The importance of diversification will be given more attention in 1950 and wise investors will watch their bond maturities so see that they are either short or systematically staggered.

REAL ESTATE.

38. The city real estate outlook is uncertain. It should continue to hold firm throughout 1950 due to less available rental space caused by pulling down old structures to save taxes and to provide parking spaces. Owing to high costs and the fear of World War III, there will be little inclination to build new city property. On the other hand, the continual movement out of our large cities—in the interest of decentralization—may cause prices to soften.

39. There will continue to be a fair demand during 1950 for suburban real estate with a shading of prices for large places, but the residential construction boom should continue well into 1950.

40. The demand for large commercial farm acreage will be less during 1950, but small suburban farms, especially those located close to established communities, will hold up, and perhaps, increase in price.

41. There will be some decrease during 1950 in industrial and private building. The cost of such building will decline a little and the quality of workmanship will improve. There should be an increase during 1950 in publicly financed building.

42. There will not be much change in business rentals during 1950, but residential rents will change higher in 1950. Only as property owners are granted higher rentals will there be more building built for rental purposes.

43. Mortgage interest rates during 1950 will continue about the same as during 1949.

44. The growth in industrial projects should continue, with sales in Florida, California, New Mexico and Arizona.

GENERAL BUSINESS

45. Many business concerns find their operations sliding down toward the break-even point. There will not be as much margin between costs and selling prices during 1950 as during 1949. Employment will gradually increase due to the installation of labor saving machinery and other causes.

46. Military preparedness will continue to bolster general business and employment during 1950, but this is not a healthy development.

47. Excluding government owned commodities, the physical stockpiles of manufactures will remain about the same during 1950 as during 1949.

POLITICS

48. 1950 will give an election year. The Republican Party will remain in the doghouse. The Administration will continue to talk radically against Wall Street and the so-called "Selfish Interests", but at heart the Administration will be fairly conservative. Its bark will be far worse than its bite.

49. The Administration will continue to be sympathetic to organized labor unless someone like John L. Lewis goes too far. In that event, such a man will be made the whipping boy, but with the consent of most prominent labor leaders.

50. The Congressional Elections of 1950 will not change the political status of Congress to any great extent.
