Farming in Washington

AFBF Stand on Parity

Among the highlights of the resolutions adopted that will guide the Federation through its 29th year is its stand on parity. This six-letter word means the relationship between price farmers get for things they sell and the prices they pay for things they buy. For the past several years, AFBF has been studying this problem.

"In previous resolutions we have recognized the need for modernizing the parity formula to take into account changes in production, efficiency and demand that have occurred among the various changes in production, efficiency and demand that have occurred among the various agricultural products since the original base period.

"We favor the retention of the present parity formula with adjustments among the various agricultural products according to price relationships which existed between the various products on the basis of a ten-year moving average.

Will Continue Working

"Should efforts to make this change be unsuccessful, the Farm Bureau will continue to work for the best solution possible of the problem of evolving an effective parity as a formula expressing a fair exchange value for farm commodities. In making the transition from the present to the modernized parity formula, the parity price of a commodity should not be lowered by more than 5 percent in any one year.

"If, as a result of the application of the above procedure, the parity price for any commodity is out of line with those for other agricultural commodities, the Secretary of Agriculture shall adjust the parity price for the commodity in question . . . The Secretary shall . . . hold open hearings in which evidence will be presented, and within sixty days . . . the Secretary must announce his decision pertaining to a revised parity for the commodity in question.

Farm Program

Turning to the farm program, the Federation warned: "We must not allow the existing national prosperity to lull us into a false sense of security, nor confuse our thinking, nor delay our work on a long-range agricultural program . . . Farmers have learned through bitter experience that an effective national farm program is essential . . . to maintain agriculture on a basis of economic equality with industry, labor and other segments of our economy."

Stressing that Farm Bureau wants the present program refined rather than junked, the Federation declared that "agriculture has too much at stake to depend upon some new and untried farm program that would endanger the balanced relationships between agriculture and the other segments of our economy."

The resolution urged continued aggressive efforts to stimulate increased consumption of farm commodities through research, education and improved production and marketing techniques. Also proposed were lower production costs, new and expanded outlets for farm commodities, disposal of surpluses in export markets at competitive world prices utilizing export payments when necessary, and use of international commodity agreements.

Keep Some Controls

When surpluses approach unmanageable proportions, farmers must have adequate programs to control and adjust supplies to prevent the wrecking of farm prices, destruction of farm buying power and resulting unbalanced economy, AFBF agreed.

In addition to keeping and bolstering the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, AAA Act and related measures, consideration should be given to providing enough flexibility in acreage adjustment programs to permit adjustment of individual production plans and not freeze acreage allotments in rigid historical patterns.

Price Supports

"We favor a program based upon mandatory variable price supports for agricultural commodities . . . The level of such supports should vary from 60 per cent to 90 per cent of parity in accordance with the importance and peculiarity of the commodity, and the supply and price position of the commodity.

"Sufficient flexibility should be provided to permit the producers of any commodity to have maximum authority to determine the level of the support price of their particular commodity and the utilization of the marketing quota features of the program."

Farm Bureau reiterated its position in favor of making CCC a permanent agency, but stressed that none of those funds should be used for consumer subsidies. Marketing agreements should be extended to certain other commodities not now covered and crop insurance programs should be experimented with before being extended to all areas of the country.

Recommends Winter Tree Transplanting

Transplanting of trees during the winter, provided the ground is not frozen too deeply, is recommended by W. E. Jackson, extension forester of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

Trees, he says, may be safely transplanted in fall and spring, "there is no better time either the year to transplant trees than right now up until the ground freezes to some depth.

"Trees transplanted during the fall and early winter season become better established in the soil during the dormant period of the winter months and the tree roots are ready to start feeding and growing in the spring season when they start to put out buds and new wood.

"There is an added advantage in fall tree planting, especially on the farm. This is due to the fact that usually there is greater activity in farm work during the spring months and if tree planting is postponed until this time, the tree planting work is slighted or is not done at all.

"There is also a better selection of tree varieties at the nursery and fall tree orders can be filled to a greater satisfaction of the planter.

"Seedling trees of several varieties, both hard woods and conifer, can be secured from the State Tree Nursery for fall planting.

"Order forms for securing trees from the State Nursery may be secured at the county agent's office or by writing the Experiment Station."

FREEZIN' REASON

Drive anti-freeze? Worry—wait chicks or duck hunt? That's pretty good excuse for the mechanic who could close up shop or sit back and let the chickens freeze the locking distance 40 to 70 per cent on the anti-freeze. So we "wait" but chicks or the wheels won't replace bodies of the wheel. They are a gift for safety which will help the careful driver avoid mishaps.

Mrs. Sharp died at 12:50 p. m. Saturday in the Ashland hospital. She had been in failing health for the past two years.

Mrs. Sharp was a daughter of the late Chess and Jennie Allen Craycraft of Sharpsburg. Since the death of her husband, she had lived with her daughter, Mrs. W. H. Powell, in Ashland.

Besides her daughter survivors include one son, Chester Sharp of St. Louis, Mo.; one sister, Mrs. W. R. Knight, Carlisle; a brother, Henry Craycraft, Sharpsburg, and three grandchildren.

Nothing can bring you peace but yourself; nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principles.—Emerson
