Former youth scholars attend APES workshop

APES '72 officers, elected for the "American Private Enterprise System" Youth Study Program are shown with adult leader, Tommy Manning from Southern States Carlisle Cooperative (left). Providing leadership are (l to r): John Soper, president; Debbie Ritchie, reporter; Karen Stevenson, secretary-treasurer and Tommy Darrell, vice-president. 27 local high school juniors and seniors and four junior leaders are participating in this nine-week comprehensive study of private enterprise, which is co-ordinated locally by Sara Swango, Cooperative Extension Service.

More than 150 local Extension Agents, local leaders, and junior leaders participated in training workshops conducted by the University of Kentucky at Hopkinsville, Elizabethtown, and Winchester during the week of Jan. 10, to become familiar with exciting new dimensions of the statewide youth group program in the study of The American Private Enterprise System. The program is co-sponsored by the University and the Kentucky Council of Cooperatives, with active participation on the part of hundreds of local volunteer leaders from business, the professions, and from education.

The local program, under the leadership of Sara Swango and Tommy Manning, assisted by junior leaders Pat Conley, Sandra Reid, Spuddy Marshall, and Barbara Sidles involves eight local resource persons also, who will be introduced from time to time during the 10-week period of the program. This is one of 50 or more to be conducted in Kentucky during the next several weeks of 1972. In 1971 there were local programs in 44 communities in Kentucky involving some 1100 high school juniors and seniors, and not less than 465 local leaders and resource persons. Subsequently, 200 top local youth scholars, junior leaders, and adult counselors convened on the campus of the University of Kentucky for the Kentucky Youth Seminar, which was held in June. From this group based on individual scores made on true-to-life business problem-solving situations at the seminar, 29 youth scholars were selected to receive all-expense-paid jet plane trips to Colorado, in August, to attend the national meeting of the AIC held on the campus of Colorado State University, at Fort Collins, Colo. While there, they competed with similar youth scholars from 41 states in taking the annual national agribusiness examination which was designed by professors of the host university. The Kentucky youth scholars, because of the excellence of their local community programs, captured the top nine slots based on scores made on this examination, in competition with almost 700 other youth scholars from allover America.

For the 1972 program in Kentucky, the planners, who include many former youth scholars still actively involved in the work, indicate the following goals:

--60 superior local programs, involving 1800 youth scholars and 660 leaders.

--240 top local youth scholars and 30 junior leaders at the June Kentucky Youth Seminar, at Lexington, June 19-21.

--30 top Kentucky youth scholars to receive all-expense-paid jet plane trips to the national AIC meeting, Iowa State University, Ames, Iowa, July 30 to Aug. 2.

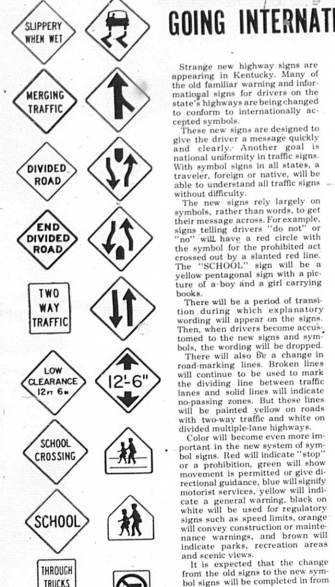
--Capture the top 10 slots on the 1972 national agribusiness examination.

--Awards, cash and college scholarships, of not less than $8,000.00.

The nine-week local program was launched on Thursday, Feb. 10. We aim to have local, state and national winners.

More information about the program can be obtained from Sara Swango, County Extension Agent for 4-H, phone 289-2312.

OLD NEW



KENTUCKY HIGHWAY SIGNS GOING INTERNATIONAL

Strange new highway signs are appearing in Kentucky. Many of the old familiar warning and informational signs for drivers on the state's highways are being changed to conform to internationally accepted symbols.

These new signs are designed to give the driver a message quickly and clearly. Another goal is national uniformity in traffic signs. With symbol signs in all states, a traveler, foreign or native, will be able to understand all traffic signs without difficulty.

The new signs rely largely on symbols, rather than words, to get their message across. For example, signs telling drivers "do not" or "no" will have a red circle with the symbol for the prohibited act crossed out by a slanted red line. The "SCHOOL" sign will be a yellow pentagonal sign with a picture of a boy and a girl carrying books.

There will be a period of transition during which explanatory wording will appear on the signs. Then, when drivers become accustomed to the new signs and symbols, the wording will be dropped.

There will also be a change in road-marking lines. Broken lines will continue to be used to mark the dividing line between traffic lanes and solid lines will indicate no-passing zones. But these lines will be painted yellow on roads with two-way traffic and white on divided multiple-lane highways.

Color will become even more important in the new system of symbol signs. Red will indicate "stop" or a prohibition, green will show movement is permitted or give directional guidance, blue will signify motorist services, yellow will indicate a general warning, black on white will be used for regulatory signs such as speed limits, orange will convey construction or maintenance warnings, and brown will indicate parks, recreation areas and scenic views.

It is expected that the change from the old signs to the new symbol signs will be completed in from three to five years.

News briefs

By Jim Warren

FRANKFORT, Ky.--State revenue officials estimate the tax proposals contained in Gov Wendell H. Ford's $3.5 billion 1972-74 budget will save the average Kentucky family about $65 per year.

The newly proposed budget would remove the current five per cent sales tax on take-home groceries and impose a two-cents-a-gallon increase in the state gasoline tax.

In addition it includes a five per cent severance tax on coal with a minimum of 30 cents per ton and removal of the state exemption on federal income taxes for corporations.

State Revenue Commissioner John Ross said the proposals would save a family of three $45 per year, a family of four $65 and a family of five $80.

The average family of four would pay $80 less for groceries and about $15 more for gasoline, Ross said.

Gov. Wendell H. Ford's recently proposed 1972-74 state budget has some new proposals to protect Kentucky's environment, and some improvements on old remedies.

Strip mining, which presumably will come under control of the proposed new Environmental Protection Commission, received the most attention.

To approve current regulatory measures, Governor Ford "told add 33 new inspectors to enforce strip mine regulations because "the law is adequate, enforcement is poor."

Also the strip mine enforcement program would receive its own operating funds, ending its current partial dependence on fees collected from strip-mining applicants.

The new proposal would provide $500,000, to be matched by federal funds, to purchase, reclaim and resell "orphan land"--areas stripped before current reclamation laws were enacted.

In other environmental areas the budget would provide increased funds to reduce air and water pollution and improve solid waste disposal.

The governor also recommended creation of a Kentucky Pollution Abatement Authority to help construct sewage treatment plants.

A study by the Kentucky Public Health Assn. indicates health care in the state is "fragmented, spasmodic and ineffective," and calls for urgent reforms.

The recently released study is based on a three-day tour of Kentucky by association officials last September and its recommendations will be given to Governor Ford and the General Assembly.

Officials participating in the study expressed shock at the conditions in some areas and not all complaints were limited to rural parts of the state. Medical care in the Louisville area also came under stiff criticism.

Among the study's recommendations were:

* Incentives to attract physicians, dentists and other health professionals to areas with dire needs.

* Regional allied health education centers for paramedical and health personnel.

* Training for minority groups in the health fields.

* Adoption of stronger housing and sanitation codes.

* Improved enforcement of strip mining regulations, violations of which threaten water supplies.

The fee system under which most of Kentucky's county officials are paid should be revamped to guarantee them a livable income, a Legislative Research Commission study says.

More money would be required because the counties' main source of income, the property tax, now is frozen.

The study said one solution is for the state to share some of its revenue and return to the counties some of the money collected from the court system.

"Because the salaries of county officials are almost solely dependent upon their statutory fees," the study said, "every two years the General Assembly is confronted with demands to raise the fees so that officials may further augment their compensation and keep up with the rising cost of living."

It said other disadvantages of the fee system are that money collected by officials often is not properly accounted for and the fee often does not pay the cost of rendering the service.

Gov. Wendell H. Ford announced the appointment of Laurel W. True as administrator of the Kentucky Program Development Office (KPDO), succeeding Joseph M. Gray.

KPDO is the state agency responsible for locating and obtaining federal funds for programs and projects at the state and local level.

True, 39, now serves as associate director of program development and operations for the Ohio Valley Regional Medical Program (OVRMP), based in Lexington.

OVRMP is a joint venture of the Universities of Cincinnati, Kentucky and Louisville to plan and implement new approaches to health services in the tri-state area.

A native of Burgin, Ky., True was employed by the state from 1959 to 1968 as evaluation technician for the Revenue Department and later as the Health Department's administrative director of Medical Care.

He also has served as senior administrative assistant for the state Medical Assistance Program.

Gray had served as KPDO head since last summer.

27 students selected to study American Private Enterprise System

"It Pays To Know" the American Private Enterprise System! 27 selected Nicholas County High School junior and seniors with the guidance of adult leaders have undertaken a comprehensive study of the American Private Enterprise System. Four former Youth Scholars, Spuddy Marshall, Pat Conley, Barbara Sidles and Sandra Reid, are serving as junior leaders for the local program.

APES '72, the local study group, organized on Feb. 10 and adopted this program which is co-sponsored on a statewide basis by the Kentucky Cooperative Council and the University of Kentucky. The program is co-ordinated locally by the County Extension Office.

Local youth scholars taking part in the study are: Roxanne Galbraith, Sue Livingood, Shirley McDonald, Sheila Smith, Carol Wagoner, Jenny Hunt, Kathy Jones, Robin Sloan, Vonora Fields, Wilma Halcomb, Debbie Ritchie, Dennis Berry, Hope Watkins, John Soper, Bonnie Spencer, Connie Gates, Karen Stevenson, Tommy Darrell, Sharon Mynear, Barbara Middleton, Sandy Cleaver, Karen Watkins, Cathy Ritchie, Janet Booth, Sue Wilson, Debbie Bretz and Kenneth McDonald.

The APES '72 youth action group will discuss such topics as taxes, private property right, business competition, stock market, and the four types of business organizations. Local businessmen will be serving as discussion leaders during the nine-week study.

Each student enrolled will be evaluated on the basis of overall participation in the discussion sessions and scores on a series of tests which cover the subject matter.

Upon completion of the local program, four of the youth scholars and one junior leader will be selected to attend the Kentucky Youth Seminar, June 19-21 at the University of Kentucky.

The Kentucky Youth Seminar also co-sponsored by the Kentucky Cooperative Council and the University of Kentucky, brings together the top youth scholars from across Kentucky who have earned the right to attend the state meeting. Seven college scholarships will be awarded as a direct result of this program.

"Because the salaries of county officials are almost solely dependent upon their statutory fees," the study said, "every two years the General Assembly is confronted with demands to raise the fees so that officials may further augment their compensation and keep up with the rising cost of living."

It said other disadvantages of the fee system are that money collected by officials often is not properly accounted for and the fee often does not pay the cost of rendering the service.

Gov. Wendell H. Ford announced the appointment of Laurel W. True as administrator of the Kentucky Program Development Office (KPDO), succeeding Joseph M. Gray.

KPDO is the state agency responsible for locating and obtaining federal funds for programs and projects at the state and local level.

True, 39, now serves as associate director of program development and operations for the Ohio Valley Regional Medical Program (OVRMP), based in Lexington.

OVRMP is a joint venture of the Universities of Cincinnati, Kentucky and Louisville to plan and implement new approaches to health services in the tri-state area.

A native of Burgin, Ky., True was employed by the state from 1959 to 1968 as evaluation technician for the Revenue Department and later as the Health Department's administrative director of Medical Care.

He also has served as senior administrative assistant for the state Medical Assistance Program.

Gray had served as KPDO head since last summer.
