Tid Bits Of Kentucky Folklore

By Dr. Gordon Wilson

"BLAB SCHOOLS"

One of my collegues, who taught last year as an exchange teacher in Great Britain, has told several times recently about her school there as a blab school. That was the old name for it, though I do not know what our British cousins call it today. That is, the children studied aloud. Just how the teacher lives through this hubbub I have neverlearned, but it apparently was not fatal to many, as the long lives of old-fashioned pedagogues will testify. The queer thing about this studying "out loud" is that it had passed long before my own experiences in school began in 1895. It is an echo out of a remote past to find that this antiquated method is still being used.

Now, Mother grew up in the Blab-school days. Often I heard her tell about the ways the students had of fooling the teacher. To be quiet was suspicious; hence every child was talking, regardless of what he was saying. One little tongue-tied boy that she knew had a special rigmarole that he went through, which bore no remote resemblance to lessons. But it gave him something to say and made the teacher think that the boy was studying his lessons. As I recall it now, his spiel was not obscene or especially funny, but it was a crazy mixture of words and sounds. This round of words he repeated day by day when he was not actually reading aloud or studying. Mother used to tell how the teacher would become suspicious when the noise lessened; then he would bring down his switch or cane on his desk and yell, above the roar, "Get to work." And the noise redoubled until even the teacher must have been happy over the studiousness of his boys and girls.

When you consider this ear-splitting noise of a blab school, you will understand why the ones that were reciting had to raise their voices to auctioneer-voice proportions. One of the yarns we laughed at over and over was Mother's telling how one of her neighbors, while plowing a half mile away from the log temple of learning, as old-fashioned orators probably called the pathetic little log building, could hear the schoolmaster "giving out" the spelling for the spelling class. One word he distinctly remembered was opium, pronounced syllable by syllable: o-pi-um. The farmer did not say whether he could hear the boy or girl spell the word above the pandemonium that furnished and orchestral background for the spelling class.

Now, here is something strange: Why did the blab school die so effectively, like Rover in the child rhyme, "all over"? By the time I had got big enough to go to Fidelity school, noise was wicked in the extreme. Talking at all was punishable as a crime. Nearly every teacher had rules about our conversing with each other. Some frowned on the whole procedure, as if we were hardened criminals likely to give away damaging secrets if we talked. Most teachers kept a record of how many times we talked, or at least how many times we admitted talking. If the number was excessive, though I do not remember how many times that had to be, we got some sort of punishment: standing up in the corner, staying in after school or at recess, not being allowed to do certain prized things at school, like raising the window or firing one of the stoves.

Anyway, talking was wicked. If it just had to be done, we had a finger system by which we obtained permission, or we went up to the teacher's desk and asked whether we might ask Mary or George what the answer to some problem was or how somebody solved a certain problem. The teacher watched us with hawk eyes and often terminated our talking long before we had got around to the thing for which we had obtained permission.

Many mischievous boys that I knew tried to get others to talk, to have partners in misery, for some of the youngsters were for ever getting punished for talking. If we had suddenly been allowed to talk, aloud, I am sure that most of us would have died of fright; that would have been an unknown privilege. At home we were not allowed any such joy; we had to steal into the conversation the best we could and risk being scolded by our parents after the company had gone.

Give Home Sewing Professional Look

Home sewers who are making dresses of cotton, rayon or silk will give a professional look to the garment if they follow the suggestion of Miss Dorothy Threlkeld, clothing specialist at the University of Kentucky.

Miss Threlkeld recommends that you use an interfacing of preshrunk light weight muslin or permanent finish organdy on either side of a front opening dress. The interfacing will provide a firm foundation for the buttons and buttonholes, and it will also keep the edges from rolling. The garment with interfacing will be much easier to iron after washing, and it will have a professional look. Collars and cuffs will also have a better appearance when they are so re-enforced, she said.

Alfalfa Tests Started

Eight fourth-acre plots are being used in alfalfa fertility demonstrations in Lincoln county. Potash and boron were used, but soil tests showed no need for lime and phosphate. The 2,000 acres now in alfalfa in Lincoln county is not enough for the 27,000 head of livestock in the county, according to UK County Agent Kelcy Driskill. There are 9,000 dairy cattle in Lincoln county.

BLADES of BLUEGRASS

By Ken Kuhn

Football is already in the air with spring practice activities edging further into the limelight every day, but before another basketball season is put into the mothballs of memory a word of praise seems in order for the outstanding job turned in by Coach Adolph Rupp and his University of Kentucky cagers.

Experts the country over, from the famed "Men In The Brown Suit" himself to the sportswriter who knew the team only through the publicity given it, ranked the 1953-54 Kentucky cage team as the greatest aggregation in the school's long history of supermacy in the basketball world.

Just how good this crew of basketeers was may never be known. They ended their season unchallenged in either the victory column or national polls. Not only did the Wildcats rack up the longest undefeated season in the annuals of the sport when they breezed through 25 straight games against all-major competition, but they were confirmed as national champions by the sportswriters and radiocasters of the country who voted them into first place in the final Associated Press poll.

Because the NCAA refused to allow the "Big Three" (Cliff Hagan, Frank Ramsey and Lou Tsioropoulos) to participate, Kentucky passed up national tournament play after winning the right by dropping challenger Louisiana State in an SEC title playoff. However, any claim on the part of the NCAA Tournament champion to share fame with the Wildcats was voided by the fact that Kentucky beat LaSalle (the NCAA champion) during a meeting in the UK Invitational Tournament last December.

The road to success and the stamp of greatness was a difficult one for the Wildcats and also for their mentor. The inimitable Baron Rupp suffered numerous mild heart attacks during the strenuous closing days of the season and the illness caused physicians to order a complete rest. But, the Wildcats chief declared "I'll be back at the helm next season"—an assurance not to be taken lightly by those figuring an end to a great era in Kentucky basketball.

Artificial Breeding Steps Up Production

Higher production in the seven herds in the dairy herd improvement association in Daviess county is noted by G. W. Nation, tester for the association.

In one recent month a grade Holstein in the herd of James H. Rafferty produced 86½ pounds of butterfat. Her daily milk production for the month was almost exactly eight gallons. The cow is a daughter of one of the top sires used in the Kentucky Artificial Breeding Association.

Rafferty's herd led in the group of less than 15 cows. Its average production for the month was 779 pounds of milk and 34.4 pounds of butterfat per cow.

Of the 183 cows on test, 43 are the result of artificial breeding, Nation said.

Clay 4-H Boy Wins Corn Championship

Growing 125.3 bushels of corn an acre won the Clay county corn championship for Perry Cornett, a Fogertown 4-H club boy. There were 16,139 stalks of 523W white hybrid on the acre. A ton of 3-12-12 and 400 pounds of 33½ per cent ammonium nitrate were applied. The land had been in corn three years, and in 1952 produced 131 bushels. Perry received a $50 government bond when the Clay County Farm Bureau presented awards to the county's corn derby winners.

Jefferson 4-H Clubs Have Big Enrollment

Jefferson county 4-H club girls numbering 1,120 are taking clothing, and attended 98 project meetings in one month. The Parent-Teachers Association gave three sewing machines to the Okalona 4-H Club of 64 members, and the PTA at the new Alice Waller school gave a machine to the 4-H club at that school.

UK Home Agent Alice Bell noted that 50 boys are among the 398 Jefferson county 4-H'ers enrolled in foods. Ninety-seven girls are taking the good grooming project.

Washington Report

By your Congressman John C. Watts

What Has Been Accomplished

The 1953 session of the 83rd Congress was properly labeled by many, including myself, a "do-nothing" session. As is always customary when there is a change of administration, we courteously waited for the Republican Administration to come forth with its legislative proposals to put into effect its great program promised to the people in the 1952 National election campaign.

However, we waited in vain. We were advised that it was necessary to proceed slowly in order that the new Administration could fully acquaint itself with the problems and formulate the legislation. We were assured that the Administration's program would be submitted early next year. After passing our annual appropriation bills and a few laws dealing with pressing problems, we adjourned to meet January 6, 1954. Generally speaking, the people of our country were willing to wait and give the new Administration ample opportunity to properly orient itself.

When we reconvened President Eisenhower, in January, in his State of the Union message, and subsequent special messages to Congress, outlined legislation that generally appeared to most of us to be progressive and proper. While his messages were for the most part general in nature it was only natural to expect that they would be followed by concrete proposals and real action on the part of the Administration to see that they became law. What has happened to that program? To be frank, practically nothing. We are now almost halfway through our 1954 session and it won't be many months before we adjourn. Does the Administration content itself with window-dressing by announcing its aims and then resting on its laurels and expecting the unexpected, or does it intend to take the necessary actions to make its program effective?

To what is the holdup due? First, to the fact that some of the legislation has not been introduced and, secondly, that which has been placed before Congress is tied up in Committees of Congress, chairmanned by and completely dominated by members of the President's own party. The Administration is Republican and both Houses of Congress are under the control of the Republican Party. The responsibility for pushing the President's program rests squarely on the President and his party. It is their move. We on the Democratic side are ready willing and able to vote for and help all phases of his program that mitigate to the good of our people, at the same time reserving the right to criticize and oppose those features that we think are bad or give special privileges to the few at the expense of the many. We, the Democrats, can and will help, but the ball is not ours to run with.

It is high time the Republican Party recognized and took some action on the responsibility of leadership that the people placed in its hands in 1952. They should forget their internal bickering. The welfare of the people is far more important than which wing or segment of the President's party is dominant.

As your Representative, I have in the past and will in the future work for and support any worthwhile legislation that is beneficial to our people and our country irrespective of its origin or whether it be a Republican or Democratic proposal.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

That the spiritual understanding which enables man to differentiate between the true and the false, is God-bestowed and is unlimited by material heredity and environment—is a leading point to be brought out at Christian Science services Sunday.

Selections from the King James Version of the Bible and correlative passages from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy comprise the Lesson-Sermon entitled "Unreality."

Scriptural texts to be read include the following from James: "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." (1:17)

Readings from Science and Health will include the following: "Spirit imparts the understanding which uplifts consciousness and leads into all truth . . . Understanding is the line of demarcation between the real and unreal . . . This understanding is not intellectual, is not the result of scholarly attainments; it is the reality of all things brought to light." (505:16-17,21-22,26-28)

The Golden Text is from Romans: "The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light." (13:12).

Spreading ammonium nitrate helped to produce 60 bushels of corn an acre on Woodrow Pennycuff's farm in Clinton county.

A single quart of sea water may contain as many as 100,000 plankton, microscopic ocean organisms on which fish feed.

Fescue Helps Out

Ky. 31 fescue has helped out in Hancock county, writes UK County Agent Charles L. Goff. "Seed dealers report the sale of large amounts of Ky. 31 fescue seed," he said. "Ky. 31 fescue came through the winter and severe drought in much better condition than any other grass. This fact is contributing to the popularity of Ky. 31 fescue."

Dairymen Did You Know? Your Profits Can Increase

The average cow in Kentucky produces below 4,000 pounds of milk and 200 pounds of butterfat yearly according to information from the State Department of Agriculture.

The average cow on Dairy Herd Improvement test produced 8,432 pounds of milk and 332 pounds of butterfat per year according to latest reports. The artificially sired daughters in this group exceeded this average by 626 pounds of milk and 50 pounds of butterfat per cow.

It pays to have high producing, efficient cows.

The Kentucky Artificial Breeding Association has 20 proved bulls whose daughters average 10,776 pounds of milk and 483 pounds of fat, and 18 outstanding young bulls bred for high production. Services are available to Holstein, Jersey, Guernsey, and Brown Swiss bulls.

Let artificial breeding help "ease the squeeze" in dairying for you.
