KENNY METHOD IS BASIS FOR BEST POLIO TREATMENT TODAY

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Men of medicine generally today accept the Kenny Method as the basis for the best treatment offered polio patients anywhere in the world.

Few medical ideas in history gained momentum and prestige so rapidly as the Kenny concept and treatment for this disease. As was characteristic of the late Sister Elizabeth Kenny, however, she personally always felt that the progress of her efforts to gain acceptance was too slow.

On the other hand, as is characteristic of the medical profession, once the effectiveness of the method was established, it became the basis for polio treatment everywhere.

Early efforts to win approval for the method were spearheaded by the Sister Elizabeth Kenny Foundation, which was established in Minneapolis in 1943. Previous to that, Sister Kenny was affiliated quarters for her work at the Minneapolis General Hospital, an institution maintained by taxpayers of that city.

The Foundation provided funds for the establishment of the Elizabeth Kenny Institute in Minneapolis, where, as of today, more than 8,000 polio patients have been hospitalized and given Kenny treatment.

The Institute is the Kenny Treatment centre for a large Upper Midwest area and serves also as the international training center for Kenny Therapists, those indispensable men and women to whom Sister Kenny passed on the heritage of her skill. Other thousands of patients have been cared for at other Kenny centers in various cities across the country.

"Abandonment of immobilization" in the treatment of polio was the objective of Sister Kenny's endeavors. The goal has been accomplished to such a degree that many of those now treating the disease have forgotten that it was the practice to carry out prolonged immobilization.

There remains little doubt but that Sister Kenny's determination and work that she and her associates performed forters in helping focus on polio the attention which lest spent to the efforts to combat the disease. She never rested historically, nor did she permit those doubters with the disease, lay persons and those in the medical field, to rest.

The hope now is that a safe and effective vaccine against polio will become generally available. Much work is being done, but the day is yet to come. In the meantime, polio remains a scourge against which the Kenny Method will continue the best combative force.

The annual polio fund appeal of the Kenny Foundation, now under way, will provide the funds necessary to continue and expand the Kenny organization's program. That program includes the training of additional registered nurses and physical therapists to become Kenny Therapists who, under medical supervision, administer the treatment; sponsorship of medical seminars, conducting research and providing emergency assistance to areas where incidence of the disease is at high level.

Even after a proven vaccine has become generally available, there will be work for a period of years to give all possible assistance to those who are crippled as residual polio cases, those to whom Kenny treatment came too late to help them and with a view to establishing maximum recovery.

The Kenny Treatment is made available to polio victims, regardless of age, race, creed or financial circumstances, upon request of a physician.

Mars Registers Great Hot And Cold Changes

If summer's heat oppresses, consider for a moment the daily change of temperature on the planet Mars.

At noon, certain green-colored areas on Mars bake at more than 85 degrees Fahrenheit, scientific measurements from the earth have shown. By twilight, however, temperatures drop to about 10 degrees and by midnight, go far below zero.

Earthbound weathermen, astronomers, physicists, and biologists this summer are hard at work around the world confirming and collecting such detailed facts about Mars. Earth's neighboring planet swung closer on July 2 than it had been in 13 years, within 40,000,000 miles, raising scientists' hopes of finding new clues to a still-unanswered question:

Does plant life, however primitive in form, exist on Mars? Are the green regions vegetation?

Mystery Of Blue Clouding

In Bloemfontein, South Africa, a "Mars Expedition" sponsored by the National Geographic Society and Arizona's Lowell Observatory plays a leading part in 1954's studies of the red planet and its green markings.

One major goal of this expedition, led by Dr. E. C. Slipher of Lowell, will be to probe unsolved mysteries of the Martian atmosphere. What, for example, causes the "blue envelope" that clouds the planet's surface on pictures made with blue-sensitive photographic emulsions?

At rare times, particularly when the earth and Mars come closest in their orbits, this blue haze disappears. Then the features of Mars stand out even on blue-light photographs. Scientists do not know what causes the atmosphere over the earth itself may be affecting radiations from the sun upon the Martian atmosphere.

Are Mars' blues haze, clouds, and changing weather above its surface, in the atmosphere envelope capable of supporting life as it is known on earth?

Very little water vapor and even less oxygen have been found in the Martian air. Spectroscopic analysis of light reflected from Mars shows far less oxygen at the surface than exists at the top of Mt. Everest on the earth.

White Areas At Poles

Scientists wonder if Mars has any water. White regions capping the poles in the north and south polar lead some astronomers to speculate whether they are thin layers of snow, ice, or hoarfrost, melting and refreezing in the changing Martian seasons.

A coordinated round-the-world patrol by 18 observatories, organized by the International Mars Committee, is attempting to photograph the entire surface of Mars every day during the summer.

In addition to temperature studies, meteorologists seek new data on such properties of the Martian atmosphere as pressure and density, formation and motion of clouds, and general circulation patterns.

From these studies much may be learned that will contribute to a better understanding of the behavior of the earth's own atmosphere. In that sense, Mars in 1954 is serving as a weatherman's laboratory.

Telephone Co. Issues 55 Million In Bonds

The issuance of $55,000,000 principal amount of debentures was authorized Wednesday, July 14, by the Executive Committee of Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company's Board of Directors, it was announced by President Fred J. Turner.

The steps taken to issue the new debentures were occasioned, Mr. Turner said, by the need for capital funds to provide telephone facilities to meet the continuing strong demand for telephone service in the south.

The debentures will be offered for sale at competitive bidding and are expected that they will bear a date of September 1, 1954. The Chase National Bank of Atlanta has been designated trustee of the new debenture issue.

Subject to the effective date of a registration statement to be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Company plans to extend invitations for bids on August 18, open bids on August 25 and if a bid is accepted, settle with the purchasers on September 1.

The Company was also authorized to retire its $30,000,000 twenty-four year 3-¼ percent debentures, due in 1977. Mr. Turner said this retirement would take place on or about October 4, 1954.

Best private guesses at the Capitol are that Congress will be in session until Aug 14. The House of Representatives will adjourn on July 31, as planned . . . but the Senate is bogged down . . . not because of Knowland's leadership . . . but by the irreprehensible desire of Senators to talk.

There's even a possibility of a special Senate session (after the House has gone home) to thresh out the pending Flanders move to censure McCarthy. No one will be quoted, but a number of Senators think this would provide entertainment far exceeding the late P. T. Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth.

Politics: Republicans are much more hopeful over retaining control of Congress than they were six months ago. Reasons cited by Republicans are . . . (1) Business is better . . . (2) The Public seems pleased with Eisenhower's legislative program . . . (3) Farmers are not protesting as much as expected over the Benson Flexible Support Program . . . and (4) Candidates have back of them (for the first time since 1932) the support of a President and his cabinet.

The Atom—Its control is in doubt: The struggle over atomic energy legislation constitutes one of the most important battles for power created by the Atomic Energy Act . . . and (4) Candidates have back of them (for the first time since 1932) the support of a President and his cabinet.

The Atom—Its control is in doubt: The struggle over atomic energy legislation constitutes one of the most important battles for power created by the Atomic Energy Act that has been waged in Congress for many years. The issue is this: Shall the competitive enterprise system be given full play in developing the industrial use of atomic energy . . . or shall the government-control advocates have their way and impose rigid regulation?

New legislation is required as the future and the world speeds farther into the Atomic Age. The legislation now in effect, known as the McMahon Act, was passed in 1946. It made atomic energy a government monopoly.

Industry, at that time, urged that more freedom to obtain parts be given inventors. Many believe that the over-cautious attitude incorporated in the McMahon Act has retarded peaceatime use of atomic energy.

The battle is still one of the main issues before Congress. The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy has recommended that the Atomic Energy Commission be given the power to require compulsory licensing of patents for five years. Under this procedure, patent owners would be subject to use by any person, regardless of the wishes of the patent holder, upon payment of royalty prescribed by the Commission.

Opponents contend that compulsory licensing constitutes seizure of property and is contrary to the fundamental basis of the Patent System.

Contending that compulsory licensing is "Un-American and dangerous," Rep. Cole (R.—N.Y.), Chairman of the Joint Committee, argued this way: "If it is logical for 5 years, than why not 10 years or 20 years, or even indefinitely? If it is logical in the atomic energy field, then why not in other fields? An economic endeavor such as electronics, radio, automobile, aircraft, or any other, if not all, segments of our economy?

Chairman Cole plans to try to get the House to eliminate compulsory licensing. He is supported in his views by another Committee member, Rep. Van Zandt (R-Pa.).

Industry also objected to Anti-Trust Law provisions recommended by the Joint Committee. This resulted in a modification approved by the Senate which eliminated much of the basis for complaint. As modified by the Senate, the Attorney-General shall notify the Atomic Energy Commission within 90 days if he thinks that a proposed license might conflict with Anti-Trust Laws. This would be done only in significant cases.

The bill recommended by the Joint Committee also provides that a patent can be anticipated by prior secret knowledge or use. This is contrary to the established patent laws of the United States. If this provision remains in the bill, no inventor can know whether his invention is patentable or, in case he does obtain a patent, whether such patent is valid.

HERE'S HOW . . .

MAKE A TABLE-DESK

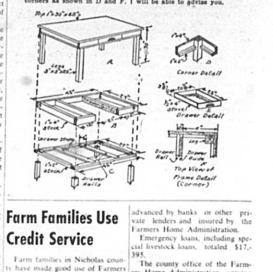
A simply-constructed table-desk can be made of wood with just a few tools and skills.

To start, construct a rigid frame, 8, all of 1 x 4 material, both glued and screwed together for rigidity. Frame section, C, calls for sawing out the corners to accommodate the legs, and cutting the slots with saw and chisel, for the drawer rails. Fit the legs, D, into the frame tightly, fasten with screws, the legs fit into the corners as shown in D and F.

The table-desk top may be of 1-inch or 2-inch material in two 12-inch boards and one 8-inch board, each 48 inches long are used, there will be only two joints in the top.

The top is fastened either by screws from the top or right-angle brackets from beneath, that has a 1¼ inch "overhang" all around.

Top detail is shown in E. For the best wood and finish, a pear local lumber dealer will be able to advise you.



Farm Families Use Credit Service

Farm families in Nicholas counties have made good use of Farmers Home Administration credit and services this past year according to John L. Zackary, Flemingsburg, the agency's county supervisor.

Additional funds have been made available, he said, to lend through the next year to farmers to operate, buy, enlarge, or improve farms.

A large proportion of the money loaned in this county during the past 12 months has been to veterans and other young farm families who are establishing better farm setups. Their greatest needs were for adequate credit and some help in developing sound systems of farming and adopting efficient farm management practices. No loans were made to farmers who were able to obtain the financing they needed from other local lenders.

A total of $107,300 was loaned in Nicholas and Fleming counties for equipment, livestock, fertilizer, feed, and seed, that farm families needed to make better use of their land and labor resources.

Farm ownership and housing loans amounted to $14,265, including direct loans from appropriated funds and loans from money advanced by banks or other private lenders and insured by the Farmers Home Administration.

Emergency loans, including special livestock loans, totaled $17,395.

The county office of the Farmers Home Administration serving Nicholas and Fleming counties is located on the second floor of the Wright Hardware Building, in Flemingsburg.
