TDE insecticide recommended for leaf worms

Early spring is considered a good time to plan controls for insects on this year's crops, says a statement from the UK College of Agriculture and Home Economics. Dr. G. M. Booth, entomologist, leads off with a tip for controlling one of the principal pests of tobacco.

Endrin and TDE are the most satisfactory insecticides for hornworms on tobacco, says Dr. Booth. Some insecticides other than these two will kill hornworms, he explains, but they are not recommended for tobacco because they may cause disagreeable odors or undesirable residues that can lead to downgrading or rejection of the crop when it is marketed.

Either endrin or TDE is available from insecticide dealers as dust, ready for use, or in the form of emulsifiable concentrates and wettable powders to be mixed with water and applied as sprays.

Use of insecticides is only one means of protecting tobacco from hornworms, Dr. Booth stresses, and this method is best considered only as a supplement to regular cultural practices that keep hornworm populations low. Plowing up stalks or otherwise destroying them after harvest cuts down on insect breeding in tobacco fields. And planting tobacco fields in the fall kills many overwintering pupae (immature hornworms). The field may then be planted to rye or some other suitable cover crop. Picking hornworms by hand from the growing plants is also profitable, says this entomologist, and should be done whenever practical.

Most tobacco producers are already familiar with these cultural practices. But they should not be neglected, because they cut down the need for using insecticides—always a somewhat dangerous practice at best.

Endrin and TDE are poisons—endrin being more toxic than TDE—and they should always be handled with care and in strict accordance with the manufacturer's directions.

Suggests berries in home gardens

Strawberries for home use should have a place in most gardens of Kentucky—rural, suburban or city, says W. W. Magill, field agent in horticulture at the University of Kentucky.

"The pleasure of going to your garden and picking vine-ripened berries is a luxury that few other garden products afford. Having a few quarts for freezing is added reason why berries should have garden space," he said.

One hundred plants of Tennessee Beauty, Blakemore or Pocahontas, set out this spring and given good care during the growing season, should produce 100 quarts next year. Late March or April is the time for planting them.

Strawberries will grow on any land that will successfully grow other garden crops. The same fertilizer program should be carried out as on the rest of the garden, Mr. Magill advised picking off the blossoms the first year, keeping the weeds out, and cultivating to make the plants grow.

Selections to be read from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy will include the following (414:21-23): "The Scripture declares, 'The Lord He is God (good): there is none else beside Him.' Even so, harmony is universal, and discord is unreal."
