Pickles Stand For Profit On Many Small Farms

LEXINGTON--For the past five years or so, University of Kentucky Extension Agents in various counties in the state have encouraged farmers to grow cucumbers for the pickle industry.

There is, according to the Pickle Packers International, Inc., sound thinking behind this effort. Americans are profoundly addicted to cucumber pickles and the demand isn't likely to decrease in the future. Therefore cucumber production can be a profitable sideline for most farmers, small or otherwise.

To give an idea of the importance of pickles, Americans consumed 18 billion of them last year, or about eight pounds each. Also more pounds of pickles were picked and packed in the United States than canned peaches, corn, peas, apple sauce, or tomatoes. With all this being true as the PPI states, then growing a patch of cucumbers seems to be a sure-fire way of adding to the farm income.

Cucumber pickles are deeply rooted in American history. They arrived in the New World with Columbus and, vitamin-packed, later saved many a pioneer family from scurvy and other ills usually visited upon those lacking fresh vegetables for long periods. For many generations, frontier farm families in America depended on their cucumber patches for the only green vegetable they could preserve through the long and seemingly endless winters.

Also down through the centuries, pickles have played an important role in world history. Cleopatra claimed they made her beautiful; Julius Caesar said they made his legions fight better, and Emperor Tiberius attributed his long life--95 years--to them.

It is also written that Queen Elizabeth I and King John were pickle fanciers, and American fans included George Washington, John Adams, and Dolly Madison. As had been told too, Calvin Coolidge's fondness for silence was matched only by his love for pickles.

And not to be left out of this roster of notable world figures who doted on pickles is Thomas Jefferson who wrote: "I know of nothing more comforting than a fine spiced pickle, brought up trout-like from the sparkling depths of that aromatic jar below stairs in Aunt Sally's cellar."

Besides being historic and mouth-watering, cucumber pickles are high in vitamins A, B-1, B-2, and C. Since the average dill pickle counts only 11 calories, nutritionists say they are valuable in the weight-reducing diet.

There's no doubt about it, the cucumber pickle lies close to the American heart. It is a part of the good old American tradition of producing good things to eat. And right now growing cucumbers for pickles can be a profitable enterprise down on the farm.

Food for Thought

By Mary Lee

Today the big hue and cry throughout the land is all about pollution and the horrors of the population explosion. So, just to keep a little balance, it might be wise to take a look at some of the good things about this country of ours.

Recently a major study on the progress of our technological society concluded with this statement: "Without technological progress since the 19th century, most men alive today would not have been born. And those alive would have been sentenced to disease, filth, and greater misery than exists now."

AND THAT'S A FACT

FAILING THE TEST IS THROWING AWAY YOUR DRIVING LICENSE FOR A FULL 6 MONTHS.

now you really can't ask a driver to have another drink

DRIVER'S FACT SHEET:
The law about drinking and driving is very precise. It fixes a scientifically measured limit beyond which it is offensive to drive. Even if a driver uses his car in making his living the penalty stands.
The simple purpose of the penalties, and the Test itself, is to make the roads safer for all of us. They exist only to discourage drivers from drinking so much that they are a danger to themselves and others.
The stakes are high. The penalties are clear and just. In addition to automatic disqualification, a convicted driver can face a $500.00 fine - or even prison for 6 months.
FACT: Now you really can't ask a driver to have another drink. Conviction will cost him his license for 6 months and possibly a $500.00 fine or even prison.

Noted And Passed...

Putting Alchhol in the Right Tank

The Senate Committee on Air and Pollution has heard testimony that an alcohol-gasoline blend can replace present lead-gasoline mixtures, cut exhaust pollution as much as 50 percent, and prolong engine life. We'll vote for it, on the ground that tanking up the car is a lot better than tanking up the driver, and that such a conversion is likely to increase the life of the motorist as well as the engine.

How Not to Combat Pornography

The Washington weekly Human Events reports an astonishing letter by Rev. Morton A. Hill, a member of the hold-over President's Commission on Obscenity and Pornography, revealing that the Department sanctioned by committee chairman Dean W. Lockhart twenty-one young men were paid $100 each to expose themselves to "hard, hard core" pornography. This committee, we remind our readers, has somehow managed to spend nearly $2 million in taxpayer money without producing a single proposal or recommendation to combat obscenity and pornography. It would appear to us that a letter from you to the President on this matter is in order. You choose your own language. Just keep it clean.
