TENDER LOVING CARE

Commissioner to emphasize nature

by Patricia Mellen

FRANKFORT—Twenty-five years ago, Bruce Montgomery was hired to manage Kentucky Dam Village State Park. In January, Gov. Julian Carroll appointed the Danville businessman as commissioner of the Kentucky Department of Parks.

Montgomery returns to the parks system with the benefit of early training in wildlife conservation and parks management and with the experience of a successful business career. Both will be put to work, said Montgomery.

The new commissioner feels equal concern for the protection of the parks' natural environment and for the responsible management of the multi-million dollar parks system.

"Our parks have a two-fold purpose," he said. "They provide recreational opportunity for Kentuckians and they're a Kentucky showcase. They show out-of-state visitors what Kentucky has to offer. If you travel from Jenny Wiley to Kentucky Dam, you go from mountains to our delta country," he continued. "There's a tremendous variety of scenery available there."

He agrees with Gov. Carroll that state parks must be considered one of Kentucky's natural resources. "Our obligation is to improve this resource," he said. "I want to reduce the carnival effect in the parks and make them more natural. I want to develop the natural phenomena they were created for.

"With our parks, we have an opportunity to leave something for future generations," he added.

Montgomery plans an emphasis on the development of outdoor recreation. "We'll spend money on naturalists, the nature centers and on trails," he added. "We don't need junk—there's enough natural beauty and recreational opportunities in these parks to attract people without it."

Montgomery has directed that the department move to expand its outdoor recreation programs. At one park the department has begun a model trail project, which he would like to expand throughout the system.

"I'd like to make the parks more accessible to the handicapped," he explained. Trail planners have included provision for gentle paths which can accommodate the handicapped, he said, and he is investigating the possibility of placing braille markers at points of interest on these trails.

His emphasis on preserving the natural atmosphere of the parks will be balanced with fiscal responsibility, Montgomery said. "I would not be a responsible public official not to act in a business-like manner."

Parks management and administration is not simple business, asserted the commissioner, whose business interests have included real estate, insurance and farming. "The ideal background for someone who wants to be a park superintendent is to be a city manager," he said. "A park has problems like a small town—it has buildings, and people, roads to maintain, and water and sewer plants.

The parks have to be financially sound, he said, and he intends to follow good business practices in operating them.

"We're going to try to extend our season where it's fiscally feasible," he said. The department's promotion of special-event winter weekends has helped keep occupancy high in the off-season, he noted.

"We're hoping to keep our parks open longer," he said, "if it's good business."

The extended seasons help local economies, he added, noting that an extended season brings more business to private enterprise in park areas.

Montgomery cited a recently completed study of the economic impact of three Eastern Kentucky Parks. "It proves what I've known all along, that parks are a real benefit to the economy."

Forestry incentive program told

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has announced a 1975 Forestry Incentives Program (FIP) aimed at improving the nation's timber production by stimulating better forest management practices. This program will be tentatively funded at the $25 million level authorized by congress.

FIP will be administered by the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) through its farmer-elected committee system. The Forest Service, in conjunction with state and district foresters, will provide the technical assistance in developing Forest Management Plans and servicing requests. Both annual and long-term agreements will be offered to eligible owners of non-industrial private forest land with cost-shares ranging from 50-75 percent of the cost of approved practices.

The FIP will be administered independently with the 1975 Agricultural Conservation Program announced earlier by the Department.

In consultation with Harry Nadler, Director of Kentucky Division of Forestry, the State ASC Committee has announced that all Kentucky counties will be designated as FIP counties.

County committees have been authorized to begin accepting requests immediately from farmers for tree planting. However, specific details are to be announced at a later date. Interested persons are encouraged to contact Paul E. Hall, CED, Nicholas County ASCS Office for more information relative to the FIP.

All programs administered by ASCS are eligible for any qualified person, regardless of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.
