SYNOPSIS.

A young woman and author on a lonely island in the Caribbean is shipwrecked. A large white dog swims ashore like a savage. She decides to educate him for company. He proves a good pupil and learns enough of her language to make her understand that he is John Revell Charnock, a man who had been reported dead for years. Katherine Langford was a highly specialized product of a leading university and a society belle. Jim, the primitive savage, becomes infatuated with her and finally proposes to her. Jim and Katherine are a great pair, they decide, for a honeymoon, they go away together. A few days later Jim is ready to be her husband. Katherine proves to be a tender and sympathetic mate. Jim begins to take her. He knocks down and leaves him unconscious one of a group of drunken sailors who insult her. A storm also in real nature on an island. Three years' ranching gives the man a fine physique and a good deal of culture. Jim is persuaded by his fortune to return from a cave where she had been injured by a falling tree and he finds a letter from her father. Katherine is reported to be engaged, on the market, eligible the honest and noble man she is. Jim is a fugitive from a crime and feels he can no longer lead forward to a life in the world. Katherine Langford, on the yacht, sights the beach and sees the man she loves. Jim is shot by a sailor
