FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Seed Frosts.

Agree, for the last is costly.
Fear is the universal offspring of uncertainty.
Curiously about trifles is a mark of a little mind.
He who flees from low can not fly from contentment.
He who cheerfully gives to the needy gives twice.
The ungrateful man injures all that are in distress.
The blast that blows loudest is soon spent.
He is every day condemned who is always in fear.
He abases the absent who abuses or detracts him.
There is hope in extravagance: there is none in routine.
Partial culture runs to the extreme: culture to simplicity.
Re-discouragement is as cheap as courage, nor any pleasure to destroy happiness grave on people. It begins in cobwebs and ends in iron chains.
No wonder that egotists find the world a selfish place. They only see themselves in it.
The world may make a man unfortunate, but not miserly; that is from within.
Recreation is not being idle, but causing the wearied part to change its business.
Truth's supreme revelations come in sorrow to individuals, and in war to nations.
Learn not to judge too readily of any one, either in respect to good or evil: we are generally mistaken.
The greatest friend of truth is time for it brings our deeds to the judgment, to heaven, or to hell!
Too much attention can not be bestowed on that important, yet much neglected branch of learning—the knowledge of man's ignorance.
The world is all trifle page: there is no concrete; the world is all here; the man is all there, but he is buried for his ambition and scorned.
The severest punishment of any injury is the conscience of having done a wrong, and no one but the guilty know the withering ties of repentance.

How a Grist Division Point Bought a Cake.

The Memphis Avalanche says: The superintendent of a coffin box in dropped in on a coffin box to dropped in on a coffin box, put his fingers together, and the head forward in a business way that forward the transfer signal for the outgoing straight-out express way, post"—the first line of sainty—"Have the attendance of the Young Ladies' Friendly Society the box, and let her look at her ideal face, suffer makes a good deal of silence at the same time—"I ask you, sir, to stop this nonsense, and do the best you can for me."

That grave faced undertaker shook the stranger's hand, and in forcible and professional sympathy, and in a subdued tones, said, as he stamped a coffin, with a look of pity on his face: "Here's a pretty one; strong wood, elegant polish, only—only—only—sir, to you below cost—$18."

"Only $18, sir!" said the other in disappearance of agitation. "There's a box here, and you see the glass is sealed. It's too dear entirely."

They looked sharply and keenly, and the undertaker fell back to fifteen dollars and even, swearing it was given for ease away.

"Well, you will park it in ice for that, I suppose," said the grief stricken purchaser.

"Great grave clothes, no! It will cost three dollars per week to ice it, at the lowest figure."

The negotiations were resumed, and the fight waxed hot, but the threat of the disappointed man to go further forced the undertaker back to fifteen dollars for the whole business.

"Well," said the poor sufferer, "I'm too poor to dispute a bargain, so we won't park him. That puts the coffin at twelve dollars."

"No sirree, it don't."

"But you said the packing cost three dollars, and taking that from fifteen dollars and fifty cents"

"But—"

"You wouldn't swindle a poor afflicted man's father?"—he ripped the stranger in with a sarcasm and the undertaker disparagingly gave in.

"The coffin has no handles," said the parent, blowing his nose.

"Of course not."

"Well, I can't take it then."

"Why, man"—cried the exasperated dealer—"the handles are worth three dollars and fifty cents!"

"You must throw them in, or I'll go to the trade."

"But I've already lost five dollars on the business."

"Can't help it. Will you not pity my poor sorrows?"

The handles were thrown in at twelve dollars for the lot.

The parchaser paused and nodded, and the undertaker said, as he pocketed "what cent" look—

"I'm too young for the extravagant," mused the parent, "what matter pomp and show in this life? I'll go my own way with vanity." I won't take the handles." To the undertaker: "Take off the box, I won't take the handles."

"But, sir, remember, the handles are worth $1 25."

"I don't want the handles, and that makes the coffin $19 50. How say, now, $10 for the coffin, I'll take it."

"No!"

"Then adieu, sir, adieu. I will go where a poor, smitten father, too deep in sorrow for business, can find one who will not take advantage of my situation. Adieu, sir."

"Stop, stop! take it!" called the coffin man. "It's ruinous, but you can have it."

Then the parent pulled out his wallet most plaintive, smiled sadly, and paid over his $10 to the conquered undertaker.

No Money Will Be Given Him.

It is rumored that Col. Craddock, secretary of the Kentucky Fence Association, having again squandered the funds of the Association to procure legislation in its favor, will attempt speculation, and in order to defraudster at it to begin trying of that body, and at the next meeting of the body, and is confidently believed by those who are to bring charges against him that he will take none of the case. In the extreme penalty of the law. It is thought that he will be condemned to serve the rest of the many women whose hearts he has broken, and then atone for at least two of his crimes—bigamy and flirtation. This ought to be done by all means. High-handed crime has stalked abroad over this Commonwealth unchallenged short enough. It should no longer be suffered to shield itself behind the accumulated, though recklessly squandered millions of a great corporation—the opulent journalistic guild—as it has done for too long years, and as it will do for ten long years to come if again suffered to buy out the law and justice by justice.

JAILERS.—The following act prescribes the fees of jailers in the State:

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That the several jailers of the Commonwealth shall receive for each commitment sixty cents per day for keeping any person committed to their charge for trial, during pleasure of or contempt of Court, or for want of the Peace or Treasury.

2. All acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

3. This act shall be in force on and after the first day of September, 1878.

Slow Your Hand

Gen. Butler had the manliness to write squarely with the Democrats in the last campaign. He broke up his organization. He broke up his truck against Hayes by a word. Many people would like to know if certain Republicans who have been as bitter as Butler in their denunciations of the Democrats without daring to show their colors. Are there traitors in the Republican camp?

After the colored people have emancipated themselves a few times more they will discover that being married themselves is much cheaper than having other men do it.

The virtue of patience bears such a prominence in the liking of God that we can neither fulfill any prompt duty as any acceptable work without it.

A little boy who wore striped stockings was asked by a man on the street why he made barber's pole of his legs. His pert reply was, "Well, isn't I a little shaver?"
