HOME PLANTING AND CARE OF THE GARDE

Those evergreens that you have been planning for such a long time to get out around the house—why not plant them now instead of leaving them until the rush of spring set in? will again prevent you getting at it?

A few evergreens, even so few as half dozen, will quite transform the appearance of your place, especially during the winter. To prepare holes for and to set out half a dozen trees, is perhaps an hour's pleasant work—and the returns, even this for winter, will more than pay the slight trouble and the moderate expense involved. Don't let your home go without at least a few evergreens for another year!

You know, if you have ever travelled through sections of the country where evergreens grow wild, that they thrive under almost any conditions. Once established, they need no pruning or nursing, but will "do for themselves," and without any assistance from the hand of man, will in few generations, and will grow to beautiful trees, making the grounds around which they happen to be placed, known as a beautiful home for miles around.

The evergreens compared to any other trees that grow have runs in their advantage.

Even on the smallest of places there will be room for a few of them. Among the many things that everyone will give an which other trees will not, is first of all color and color throughout the winter.

Of course for forming a screen to hide unsightly build ings and to shut privacy from the street or from the neighboring places, no other trees begin to compare with evergreens. Aside from their many particular advantages, they serve as points of interest in any scheme of landscaping, may be used to make the home one more beautiful.

Among the many useful purposes for which evergreens may be used are the planting of single specimens for ornament; the planting of a hedge for privacy or to serve as a shelter to the grounds from cold winds in winter. "foundation plantings" around the base of the house, for screens of various sorts.

As single specimens, no other trees are quite so effective. Almost any of the evergreens lend themselves to this purpose, but particularly good are the various firs and spruces. Among these, Norway's Fir and Colorado Blue Spruce are particularly good. The Norway's Fir is graceful, hardy and so dense growing that even its natural growth gives the effect of having been pruned or sheared. Kostter's Blue Spruce is another of the best known of all ornamental trees. Its characteristic, a distinct blue color and distinctly and yet distinctly

any position and at the same time in color harmonizes with the follage of other evergreens and contrasts with it. Of the various evergreens of this variety none is more attractive than in almost any landscape grouping.

The Pines also make excellent trees. The best known of these is the variety White Pine, but in southern where there is danger of the blister rust, one of the other pines, such as the Norway Pine or the Austrian Pine should be used in its place. The dwarf or Mugho Pine may be used in many places where there is room for it for one of the tall growing varieties. It is very hardy, and while naturally have wonderful growth, it is a very upright new growth which is formed each year gives it the appearance and beauty of the pine family.

The cedars are particularly effective as single specimens where a bold columnar effect is wanted in the landscape or to harmonize with the architecture of the house.

One of the finest of all evergreens for hedges or windbreaks is the Arborvitae. This may be planted close and trained to any height desired, and is most naturalistic and graceful hedge may be had by planting it in a more distinctive spot—in fact, it will look as fine

Arbor Vitae is also hospitable for hedges and windbreaks, but is inferior for this purpose because of its hardiness. Its place is in the ever-growing dense growth which makes.

For foundation plantings of course the tall growing evergreens are objectionable because, after a few years, they either must be cut or what spoil their natural beauty, or the foundation will be crowded out of proportion. For other places, or for the purpose for which they are being used, for foundation plantings select some of the dwarf varieties such as the Mugho Pine which we already been mentioned, or a dense spreading Cypress and Yews.

For screens practically any of the evergreens may be used. The varieties to be selected will depend on the conditions to be met—how tall the screen may be wanted, whether dense enough to serve as a wind break or simply to screen a view, etc. The Hemlocks and Firs are varieties of which are rapid growers are particularly good for this purpose as they keep close branches down close to the ground.

In former years Arbor vitae was the method of parking and shipping were in general use, the method of packing which evergreens could be carefully set out was very much more limited than it is at the present. With the "B. & B." or "ball and burlap" system of shipping, trees planting can be successfully done throughout the fall. This makes it possible to enjoy the advantages of evergreens the first season after the new house or bungalow is finished, or when the rest of harvesting is over on the farm.

Do not put the Railroads Back in this Roundhouse

Certain demagogue politicians and others who hope to profit thereby, are now advocating government ownership and operation of the railroads. They would put railroads in the Governmental "Pork Barrel," and put the burden of the tax-paying public a still heavier load.

Government operation during the war cost the taxpayers of the United States $1,000,000,000 more than it added the cost of outstanding the standard compensation for six months after the delayed labor claims and demands had been adjusted and settled. Expenses in excess of $1,000,000,000 in addition to the cost had to be met by all employees of Government. Public Property. President Harding said he believed the Government should own and operate the railroads, rather than which would destroy private initiative, create regional jealousies, create regional jealousies.

BOOKS READY FOR LEAF REGISTRATION

LEXINGTON RECEIVING PLANTS WILL OPEN TODAY—OTHERS DECEMBER 18

Director of Warehousemen Ralph M. Barker announced Saturday that Lexington receiving plants of the Burley Tobacco Growers' Cooperative Association will be opened to receive the 1922 crops of members on December 6 and receiving plants in all other towns of the Burley district will open December 18.

Mr. Barker is working on the personnel of the receiving plants the association will operate this season and hopes to announce the results within the next few days.

Rumors of the sale of the 1922 crop to distributors in some sections are declared to be without foundation, Mr. Barker said. He said he believed, J. Sherman Porter, head of the association's publicity department, said.

Growers who are members of the association throughout the district are preparing to deliver their crops, he said. Some drop in the market is reported to have disappeared many of the outstanding contracts, he said, adding that those who for the past two years have contracted their crops to the cooperative with a view to obtaining enhanced bulk prices and pay for their crops in full on delivery will turn to the association at these towns where stable prices.

Mr. Jas. C. Blount, of Sharpsburg, who will be manager of the local association, said that he was delighted at getting the plants here and expected to begin receiving Monday. The books were opened Monday morning for the registration of crops and will be open from now on.

Mr. Barker, manager of the association, and Mr. Blount, manager of the local association, are now in Louisville and will make the transportation of the crop to the Louisville plant. This is being done by the Burley Tobacco Growers' Cooperative Association, of which Mr. Barker is president and manager.

GENERAL MANAGER OF L. & N. DIES SUDDENLY

R. M. Starks, 60 years old, general manager of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, died suddenly at his home in Louisville last week from a heart attack. Mr. Starks, who was a native of Logan county, entered the service of the L. & N. as messenger at Guthrie, Ky., in 1879. He was soon promoted telegrapher. He had been general manager of the L. & N. since 1904.

WOULD CHANGE METHOD IN NUMBER OF PROPOSITIONS

Several newspapers throughout the state have advocated a plan of assessing and taxing the motor vehicles, which, is claim-ed, would more equitably distribute taxes. The plan is to place a license tax on automobiles, similar to that now in vogue, based on horsepower. In this way, it is claimed, more money would be raised than is now collected under the present system.

PER CAPITA TAX $13.24 IN COUNTY

EACH CITIZEN'S SHARE IN TAX BURDEN FOR STATE AND COUNTY PURPOSES

Every man, woman and child paid an average of $13.24 in state and county taxes for 1922, according to figures released by the office of Auditor Sheriff Zimmer P. Gaunce. The total taxes paid by citizens of Nicholas county for state and county purposes for the year 1922 amounted to approximately $1,231,000 when the penalty was added on December 20.

Between five and six thousand dollars remain on the tax books to be collected, most of this amount would be added to about $14,000 in the 1923 census, which gives the population of the county at 9,894.

The largest number of taxes were paid during the month of November, about $140,000 being collected during the last month. Collections during the remainder of the collection period were as follows:

August $4,088.31; September $6,- 264.73; October $17,500.47.
