Concerning "Scratching."

Following its usual policy, which it has observed for the last eleven years, with one exception, The Mercury has taken no part in the Primary campaign, which closes tomorrow. As a newspaper we have not espoused the cause of any candidate, and we have attempted to give to each candidate a fair and accurate publicity in our news columns. The editor of this newspaper has his personal preferences, naturally, and in common with all other loyal voters will express that preference in Saturday's balloting. That preference has not been indicated in the columns of this newspaper, and will it be set forth in this editorial.

With that fact understood, we shall feel free to discuss a matter concerning which there seems to be considerable misunderstanding on the part of some voters, with the assurance that even the most excited partisan may not justly accuse us of seeking to further the interests of any candidate.

For the first time in our newspaper experience we have witnessed a plan to voters to "scratch" the ticket of the party with whose ideas they are affiliated," made before the Primary, and made by those actively engaged in campaigning for candidates to be voted for in that Primary. The situation is so incongruous that one prefers to accept the charitable explanation that the accepted code of procedure in primary political contests is not clearly understood. In fact, this seems to be the sole explanation, for the writer upon most realize that such a plan of campaign is the poorest of practical policies, for if the advice to "scratch" be heeded, who, except he be endowed with prophetic sight, may say, before the Primary, what candidate will get "scratched?" In our discussion of the matter, at any rate, we prefer to assume that those who urge participants in a primary election yet to be held to "bolt the ticket," if the result be not to their liking, do so from what seems to The Mercury to be a misconception of the rules of the game.

Now in our republican form of government the plan of selecting our officials through the functioning of two dominant political parties has stood the test of many years. Sporadic offshoots from one or both of the old parties occasionally spring up. In one instance such a third party held the balance of power and decided the result of a national election, but eventually the voters have returned to their accustomed allegiance and the existence of one or the other of the old parties have been elected to the important offices. Until some better plan is evolved, therefore, it must be admitted that we achieve self-government through the instrumentality of either the Democratic or the Republican parties.

This being the case, the voter who wishes to have a voice in his government does one of two things. He either identifies himself with one of the existed parties or becomes an Independent in politics. For the time being, The Mercury is Democrat, has the sincerest respect for true Independent in thinking—an unreasoned vote not be constitutes a balance of power which is intelligent and frequently a safeguard to popular government. He takes no part in the nominating contests of the parties, thus giving his title to Independence in politics, and goes to the balloting booth in November, unpledged and free to vote for any candidate on any ticket.

Your party man decides that the cause of popular government may best be served through the agency of a political party. Presumably, at least, he selects the party with which he allies himself by reason of his belief in the principles expressed by that party. Having made his decision, he voluntarily becomes a ballot-casting soldier in the ranks of that party, pledged to its principles and party laws. That his allegiance need be sketch does not hold, for he may leave that party and join another or leave all parties and become an Independent in politics.

But The Mercury does maintain and we believe we are right, that no fair-minded person will deny this statement, that so long as a voter claims allegiance to any party, so long as he takes part in the selection of the candidates of that party, in convention or primary election, he does, by that action, pledge himself, in honor, to abide by the decision of the majority contest. It is true that one takes no oath, when becoming a member of a political party, that one will support the nominees of that party, but participation in pre-election contests within the party is in itself a tacit pledge of willingness to accept the decision of the majority. Failure to observe this pledge, if carried to the extent of voting for the candidate of the opposing party, renders the voter ineligible by party law to take part in future nominating elections within the party. In no vote of anyone suspected of having "scratched" the ticket may be challenged and the voter required to make oath that he supported the party nominee in the last general election, before he is eligible to take part in any subsequent primary election. This right to challenge a vote, though seldom invoked, is a party law.

Many of our women voters have participated in the primaries, seeming to become acquainted with party laws and procedure and The Mercury has gone into this matter at some length, feeling sure that a misunderstanding exists concerning the obligations assumed by a voter who takes part in a primary election to select the candidates of a party.

What we have written has been written in the kindliest spirit and without the intention of furthering the interest of any candidate or candidates. The Mercury, being a non-partisan political paper, has not the least idea who the nominees of Saturday's primary election will be. The writer knows the men he should like to see nominated and he will vote his choice in the Democratic Primary, hoping that his candidates will win, but absolutely sure that he will be true to his implied pledge to his party, which voting in that Primary means, and support the nominee.

One Must Have "Sinned" To Be "Converted."

Under the caption, "A Brand From The Burning," the Carlisle Mercury has given our "conversion," and comments with considerable relish upon the fact that we have "seen the light" in the matter of the proposed bond issue.

The Courier-Journal does The Mercury an injustice, unintentionally, no doubt, but none the less an injustice, in that it misrepresents the attitude of this newspaper toward the bond issue, since that question came to be a topic of public interest in Kentucky.

In the opening paragraph of its editorial, after referring to the fact that "a month or two ago" The Mercury was counted among the supporters of the proposed $75,000,000 bond issue," The Courier Journal continues:

> Its columns were used in defense of the measure and it laughed to scorn those who expressed the opinion that the bond issue would not be altogether the best thing for the people of Kentucky.

The Courier-Journal is mistaken. The columns of The Mercury were never at any time used in defense of the proposed bond issue, nor did we attempt to laugh to scorn those who oppose the measure. We challenge anyone to produce an issue up until that of last week in which an expression of opinion, either for or against the advisability of the bond issue plan, may be found.

The Mercury did urge the submission of the question to the voters. It would do so again. It is the only method of deciding the question definitely and preventing it from becoming a perennial pony for the politician. In urging the submission of the question, however, The Mercury attempted no defense of the bond issue, nor did we condemn it, stating plainly that we were undetermined as to the advisability of borrowing this amount of money, but convinced of the wisdom of allowing the voters of Kentucky the opportunity to decide.

The Courier continues:

> I is the matter of robbing the people of Kentucky of the millions which should go on their roads in order to pay the huge interest debt which troubles its editor and which has converted him.

We must disagree with our Louisville neighbor in this also. "Robbing the people" is putting it harshly, we think, and something it serves of the spectating benighlight, and the perspiring protagonist. It is better business, so far as the building of public roads is concerned, to save the interest, if the interest may be saved. A single business matter and like all matters of business not conceptions to convincing demonstration.

We are inclined to be neutral about our "conversion," neighbor, hoping that we have convinced you that The Mercury has never wavered in the "sin of bond issue," as you seem to think, and to be converted, one must first have sinned.

Failure to observe the street intersection stop ordinance on the part of motorists increases the possibility of accidents. Unless the stop ordinance is observed by all it becomes a source of danger to traffic instead of proving a protection intended. The driver passing through the main thoroughfare takes it for granted that the law will be obeyed and consequently does not approach street crossings as carefully as he would otherwise do. The Mercury has heard some complaint recently concerning the violation of the new ordinance and much complaint concerning the violation of the speed ordinance. Speeding through our streets should certainly be stopped before the tragic death of some innocent child is the result of this useless folly.

The change in the time schedule of trains on the Maysville branch of the L. & N. serves further to isolate the towns between Paris and Maysville. The farmer gets his mail a day late and the merchant waits until midday for his perishable green produce. The reason for the change, we understand, is that it effects an economy in operation—saves a bit of money for the railroad. Ho, hum! money must be saved in times piping times of the reign of the good Cal Coolidge, if one can find the money to save. As usual, the farmer, the merchant and the producer pays for his mail, is the goat.

The Mercury is grateful for the following letter from Holland Dills, a "hatchet" of the old Mercury office and a disciple of that eminent philosopher, the senior member of the Mercury force, Dr. F. Owen ("Doses") Allen.

Dear Warren:

The Mercury office having been my incubator in a manner of speaking I rise to congratulate you and her and candidly I think it State prize is too narrow.

A BRAND FROM THE BURNING

(from the Courier-Journal)

A month or two ago the Carlisle newspaper the Carlisle Mercury, was counted among the supporters of the proposed $75,000,000 bond issue. Its columns were used in defense of the measure and it laughed to scorn those who expressed the opinion that the bond issue would not be altogether the best thing for the people of Kentucky.

But the Mercury has seen the light. It is the matter of robbing the people of Kentucky of the millions which should go on their roads in order to pay the huge interest debt which troubles its editor and which has converted him. Says the Mercury:

> So far as the building of roads is concerned, it, as we are assured by those who know, or should know, the funds available for road construction and maintenance will accomplish the end sought just as effectively, if not quite so rapidly as would be possible with the funds secured through a bond issue we must admit that the need for haste does not seem to justify the expenditure in interest.
> Secretly and properly stated. That constitutes the main ground of the "Pay-As-You-Go" movement. Kentucky's neighbors are using good roads in such States as Indiana, where there are more paved highways and more miles of macadam in use in the Union.
>
> The Mercury adds further on in its bond issue article that "while being willing to admit that it might turn out better than we anticipate, we have to take right—the necessary money for the slower but identical accomplishment being in sight—to use the money and save the interest."
>
> But it is not without misgivings that the Mercury abandons the shaking bond issue ship for good solid ground. It speaks feelingly of the money spent for educational, penal and charitable institutions. Referring to the proposals for such purposes, which were added with the sole object of catching the votes of the sympathetic, the Mercury concludes:
> No matter how firmly convinced we become that it is better to pay for roads as we build them, we may never discuss it without a longing, longing look at the tail of the ship, which signaled it, but seems destined if we read the signs of the times aright, to follow it to earth.

Unquestionably these institutions can be better taken care of by the State. The present Administration refuses to allow the Board of Charities and Corrections to spend its no charge even the money it earns. They must have more funds but it should be decided that the money should be provided through a bond issue the proposal for the bonds should be submitted uncomplicated with proposals for bonds for other purposes. The people should not be compelled to vote for more than $10,000,000 of bonds for other things in order to vote for less than $10,000,000 of bonds for the institutions.

During the Nineteenth Century the population of the world grew from 846,000,000 to 1,600,000,000.

190 Paid Out by the Railroads every time the Clock Ticks—

Just a few years ago, this impression, "A Billion Dollar Railroad," started the people of this Nation. It seemed beyond the bounds of possibility that this staggering sum of money would be required to run our Government.

Compare this figure of a billion with the 1923 the Railroads of America distributed 190 million dollars—a sum nearly twice as great as the entire expenditure of the National Government during that year.

Of this sum more than one hundred million dollars representing new capital, practically all of which has been invested, was invested in new equipment, new tracks, and added facilities. Of the balance, more than $90,000,000 of industry two billion dollars were expended for fuel, steel, lumber and other supplies. More than fifteen hundred million dollars for wages, and approximately $200,000,000 was paid in taxes. Taxes are the largest single fraction of time, this staggering sum of six hundred million dollars—one dollar out of every five paid to railroad employees, and in the general prosperity of the Nation, of approximately 110 every time the clock ticks.

Attached to the same unit of time, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, in 1923 spent in its operating expenses $1,000,000 a day, and paid out a total of $21,000,000 dollars, which figure includes labor, taxes, fuel and supplies, but does not include the $11,000,000 invested last year in new equipment and improvements to L. & N. property.

Remember that the railroads put more money into circulation than any other industry, and that the one dollar out of every fifteen the Railroad earns is a railroad employee.

PERSONAL PERENNIALS

I know a garden where the phlox in purple phalanx grows—
Where lilies aristocratic stand
With every wind which blows—
And down the path pink hollyhocks
Stand in tall, ceremonious
The old sun-dial, weather-scarred,
Dozes on its rugged base
Words which—with thoughtful no garrulous,
As child, I used to trace:
"Horse sou numero, ahd
Ne pas oublier." Sweet
And comfort, nowadays, since life
Is a hurried, hectic race with Time,
To know the dial yet proclaims—
Persuasive as the flowers—
Its gospel: "Take no heed of rain—
Count just the sunny hours!"

Burley Decides To Install Redrying Plant in Carlisle

Directors at Meeting Tuesday Vote For Establishment Of Redryer Here

A tobacco redrying plant in Carlisle is assured.

A telephone message late Tuesday from Louisville, stated that the executive committee of the Burley Tobacco Growers Association in a meeting held that afternoon had definitely decided to erect a redryer in Carlisle.

The details, location, size of machine to be installed, storage space and the date work will begin on the plant will be worked out later, the message stated.

The installation of a redrying plant, if operated on a twenty-hour shift basis, which it is understood will be done, means the employment of approximately two hundred people and a weekly payroll in the neighborhood of $3,500. The benefit of such an institution to this community is evident. Practically all of this payroll will go into tradesmen of local trade and as a result all lines of business are sure to show improvement.

Funds for the installation of the plant will be furnished by local capital. The investment will pay dividends of 8 per cent and the plant will be taken over by the Association as soon as funds for that purpose become available.

The successful outcome of the campaign to secure a redrying plant for Carlisle comes after four months of earnest work on the part of the Chamber of Commerce and its Directory and many individual members of that organization, who have devoted their time and energies to the business of presenting the proposition to the Burley Association and urging the claims of Carlisle as a logical point for a redryer.
