CUMBERLAND FALLS

A Kentucky beauty spot which is sought by a hydro-electric power company as the site for a dam. Protests have come, even from citizens of other States.

I've often wished that I had ever, For life, six hundred pounds a year, A handsome house to lodge a friend; A river at my garden's end, A terrace walk, and half a wood Of land set out to plant a wood.

—Jonathan Swift.

TOO GOOD TO TURN DOWN.

Shelby county voted her road bond issue by a majority of 1,423. Shelby voters thus authorize the issuing of $200,000 worth of road bonds, to which the State will add $200,000. As a consequence, Shelby county will get her primary roads finished and the funds available for road work each year can then be devoted entirely to the construction and maintenance of side roads.

Voters of Nicholas county are asked to pass on a proposition which is identical with that so overwhelmingly approved by Shelby and some fourteen other counties, except that we are asked to raise $75,000, to which the State agrees to add $225,000, the total amount to be used for the completion of the primary road system in Nicholas county. When this is accomplished the main roads will be taken over by the State and known State-maintained roads. The funds available for rural work annually in this county may then be used to construct and maintain the side roads.

Not a single county, to which this proposition has been submitted has refused to approve it. It is too good an offer to be turned down.

A VALUABLE SERVICE.

The decision which awarded nominal damages to Judge Hulbert, in a $50,000 libel suit growing out of editorial comment in the Lexington Herald upon the conduct of the Clayton murder case, upholds the right of the press to criticize and even to condemn the conduct and decisions of a judge of a court.

The fact that two sentences in the editorial upon which the libel suit was based conveyed a meaning not in accord with the facts was the ground upon which nominal damages were awarded the plaintiff. The editor of the Herald promptly agreed to make correction of that error. That he had already made known, in a letter written about the time of the filing of the libel suit, his willingness to correct any misstatement in the editorial, is our recollection of the matter.

At any rate the right of the press to criticize the act of any public official is upheld by the decision in this case. Aside from any belief which might be construed as partisan that the Herald performed a valuable service in going such wide publicity to the trial of the Clayton murder case, we feel that in standing trial in this suit the editor of the Herald has rendered a distinct service, not only to the press of Kentucky, but to the cause of free speech as well.

A QUESTION.

We are paying for five-cent gasoline in Nicholas county.

The proceeds of this tax go to the State Road Commission, to be used in construction.

Is there any objection to Nicholas county getting some of this money we are paying out at the rate of fifty cents for every ten gallons of gasoline?

How can we get our share?

By agreeing to accept the Bond Commission's offer to match every dollar we raise for work on the primary roads in this county with three dollars from funds in their hands.

Of course we can be neighborly and unselfish and let the surrounding counties that have accepted the three-for-one proposition use our perfectly good nickels. Voting against the road bond issue on July 17th will do that.

However, as The Mercury has observed before, why not get ours, while the getting's good?"

THIS, THAT, AND 'TOTHER

A page from the diary of a country editor.

Lay late and hope to find the sky gray and the air heavy and filled with rain. And I am fain to agree with the poet who wrote:

"When it is rare as it did in June,"

though, forsooth, the bobolinks sing night would not define the word "rare," as do I in my clear house in dropping a modified post in my mail, carving in the wax, Joy, oh the realizer, who dost know that it is a beautiful day, which I agree, being too deep in the doldrums to deny it. Rising come to the office, open wide to this, that and 'tother, and to preparing to issue a new paper, prose, our old jobber being full of years and like to give up the ghost at any moment. And the express inks are pretty and the Lord throw knows from whence will come the wherewithal to pay for this new machinery, as much printing goes to mail-order houses these days, and so invariably do merchants begin their campaigns by slapping their advertising, which is likely giving their shops to save their kiss. But, alack! a copy of Philadelphia lawyers could not convince them of it.

And I rather myself with the polyanna thought that if the sheriff does get one, I shall not be ashamed to let some poor devil see my shop and to fill to making proofs, like

Better is a fallow-spayed shop and no work than a shop full of work to do and naught wherewith to do it.

And I borrow one

"The poor always ye have with you,"

or words to that effect and I shorten much with the thought that though everyone grow rich and ride in bennies wagons, that spring shall never look of fadeless mert, so long as I do tell at newspaper making. Which cheers mucho and at the moment comes Mistress Dot to inform her father, Spike Collivet, that she will not have the model he had just given her, but that she would keep it, as she might need it another time, which causes a laugh mod much rug, big and bobtail and I begin to feel fine, when in pops a representative of the purveyors of electric juice and I do remember that I owe them seventy-three dollars for juice and light and cable and meters, fused and switches and cut-ins and cut-outs and the Lord knows what, incidental to the putting on of my juice. Rachel, And I do seem I be very hoop, hoping he will return another time, but he does not come for his money it seems, but to tell me of the Chamber of Commerce and how it would be damned, damned if it not. And he does paint a fearful, but true picture of fused nuts for electric juice, which might cause (who knows?) if Pluto be damned. Which does make me ponder, huh, not for me, for I fail in thinking of the power of much money, how it gets what it will, and how it causes the lowly to crouches out here and there, and how it causes the high to stand, I think of the tendency to centralize both in government and business and of how the small town business suffers as a consequence. At least I know one which does, for great corporations maintain their own print-shops.

And so, alas! the doldrums return and I lunch poorly and in out humor. And the new press threatens to give me a lofty kingfisher fly from its perch on a telephone pole and the high pitched song of the robin hunting cover is no even show, but some of my acquaintance, much, like little fellow sings his "Pulu, Pulu, summer, summer's here." So recently to his spectator which is a mighty, mighty bird, a gorgeous one, not a singing voice.

And in the early twilight we reach our journey's end and, tired, I take a long avenue of trees, the other side are wide fields of experimental hay-grass, some of them cut, stripped, golden from the comb of the stripper. My young son shows me the nest of a rain crow, which he has found in the fields of hay-seed, and as I walk with him there comes the song of the mocking bird, the cooing trill of the field sparrow, the distant strumming of a dove. And straightway the dodrans are entirely gone, and I do find, as always, that Nature has a power to heal the petty worries of life.

A physician wonderful is Nature, to "him who holds communion with her visible forms," and truly and unselfishly, it seems to me, the poet was written:

I . . . and the globe
Into his darker musings with a mind
And holding sympathy, that stretch away
Their shapeless arms for he is aware.

And so I put behind me all the worries of the morning, and I am brought to look calmly, if regretfully, upon a copy which would destroy the beauties of the handiwork of the Universal Mother with never a qualm, if dollars are to be gleaned by destroying. And I am cozed with a whimsy of a dam across the Cumberland and a new mill among the giant trees of the Youghiogheny and Monongahela, a great refrigerating plant, and Niagara Falls dried up and all the new brides nowaying, were it not that many think the Lord, our grandsire in canyons and majesty in organs and wonders in caverns beneath the earth and the rainbow remained a waterfall.

And I fell to a singe of the dry grass, that those who do love to "sit on easies to mount air floss and fell, to dwelly trace the forest's dusky aisles, seldom view the time, so busy are they fighting the wolf from the door, while those who care not a whit for a rainbow, cities there be a pot of gold at the end, get them money, and buy great estates and artists do build them lovely gardens, to which they walk—and look neither.

With which thought there comes to me lines of Elizabeth Barrett Browning:

Earth's crowned with treasure,
And every common bush afire with God,
And only he who sees takes off his shoes:
The rest sit round it and pluck blackberries.

So to sleep.

POEMS THAT WE LIKE.

OF ONE SELF-SLAIN

When he went blundering back to God,
He songs half written, his work half done,
Who knows what paths his trained feet trod
What bins of power or pain he won?
I hope God smiled and took his hand,
And said, "Poor friend, paradise is for all
Lie down and rest, I need no command,
Why couldst thou not remain at school?"

THE GARDEN OF PROSERPINE

(Alpes—Apennines (Italian)Lake, where the sound is quiet,
Here, where the olive-groves
In dedalic devious of dreams, to watch the green fruit gleaming for ripening fold and twining,
Half-hoary, half-green and shining,
A sleepy world of streams.

I am tired of tears and laughter,
And men that laugh and weep
Of what may come hereafter
Of pain, of parting, of grief
I am weary of days and hours,
Blown buds of barren flowers,
Desires and dreams and powers
And everything but sleep.

Here life has death for neighbor,
And far from age or one
Also sorrow and sin, we do labor,
Weak alike and spirits clear,
Gray olive, gleam and silver
Here not with the noise thither;
Let us wash minds blow hither,
And no man knows grief for me.

O growth of moor or coppice,
No heather-flower or vine,
But blossoms beds of peppies,
Green grapes of Proserpine,
Pale buds of shaving rushes
Where no leaf blooms or blushes,
Live this wherever she crushes
For dead men deadly wine.

Pale, without name or number,
In fruitless fields of corn,
They bow themselves and slumber
All night till light is born;
And like a soul belighted,
Is bud and bloom outwitted,
By wind and mist shifted
Comes out of darkness morn.

Fields, of Newport, at his examining trial before County Judge Paul D. Darnell Tuesday morning. Fields was fatally wounded by the officer, who was serving as deputy sheriff, on May 8, near Abner's Mills, when Fields is alleged to have resisted arrest on charges of larceny.

Fields was shot by Mr. Gaunes, it is claimed, when he ran and made motion as if to draw a pistol. The bullet entered his spine, paralyzing him from the waist down, and he died at the General Hospital in Cincinnati on June 8.
