SUMMER'S HALF OVER

(The locusts have begun to hum of evenings since yesterday it's dondate, which is a sign that summer is half over.—Blanchard.)

The locusts are starting to sing,
A sign
That summer is half over,
Their music rises and falls.
Benign,
And summer is half over.

The farmers are finishing their oats
And wheat,
When summer is half over.
The cornfields flourish and grow
In the heat,
And summer is half over.

The noontides are sultry and hot
In the glow
Of a summer that is half over,
And warmer and stiller the short
Nights grow
When summer is half over.

The song of the locusts will soon
Be gone,
For summer is half over,
And migration and hours and days
Spread on,
Bringing—and life—are over.
