ABILITY TO EARN LESS IMPORTANT THAN TO SAVE

By S. W. Straus, President American Institute for Thrift

The ability to make money particularly in the prime of life, when young person is not usually accompanied by great responsibility, is ability to save. When wealth is acquired easily, through talent or some special aptitude, the habit of saving and investing cautiously is often lost and it until the days of early youth are gone.

Man or woman can be so shrewd an earner that they can afford to ever be careless of the money they do not conserve.

We often hear of men who are on the high-road to success and it seems impossible that they could develop into financial failures. We may not know that they are defying the practices and the principles of thrift. But they are their success cannot be permanent.

Lack of thrift has caused more financial shipwrecks than any other cause. There are today many men who must have a steady income, or they will have to save money. During the course of their career they have earned larger sums than their fellows who have spent their fingers from day to day. They have earned, but they lacked the quality of permanent earning power.

The majority of men who are built that way are not to blame. They are the victims of circumstances. They are the victims of their ancestors. It was circumstances that made their ancestors what they were. Their ancestors were
