The above philosophy applies particularly at this time to flour. There are more chap grades of flour, selling under the name of the best, than was ever known before. If you stick to WHITE ROSE you may rest assured that you will receive quality in every sack you buy.

SLEIGH BELLS IN EARLY MORNING

(Charlotte F. Babcock)

After the ceaseless whir and monotone of the steam radiator with tiny raspy voice the trolley student intermittent groan

Broken by shrieks and harsh cacophonies;

How bright and lightsome are the sleigh bells clear

Chiming in the crisp air of morning early,

After the harsh, unmeaning hurly-burly.

No two alike: This one more slowly ringing

The sleepy horse still drowsing—snow-clogged feet.

But yonder floods of powdery snow out-flinging

The eager feeds dance in proud rhythmic beat.

Thoughts of old winsome days are echoing

In those keen bells, though now the humble sleigh

May be the little tradesman's come to bring

The simple necessaries of the day.

But oh, the picture! silken tassels red, And cheeks as red stung by the bitter blow.

Steeds Punsing, gay bells on each tossing head.

Pouring their silver on the crystal snow?

THE PRESCHOOL CHILD HEALTH SERIES NO. 4

Prepared under the direction of the Bureau of Maternal and Child Health Kentucky State Board of Health Louisville, Ky.

There are certain diseases to which children are very susceptible. Many parents seem to look upon measles and whooping cough as necessary evils, though some of them know that these diseases are often fatal in infancy. Few, however, appear to realize that even after the child is two years of age attack of measles or whooping cough may result fatally. In 1925, over 500 children between the ages of two and five died from measles, and almost a thousand died from whooping cough. Scarlet fever claimed over 800 victims of the same age, and diphtheria killed about 2,000. Every mother and father should be told that they need never lose a child from diphtheria, because the child can be protected and the disease prevented by the simple use of toxin-antitoxin, just as smallpox can be prevented by vaccination. Means of controlling scarlet fever are also known, and the use of convalescent serum is lowering the mortality from measles.

The restless, active little boys and girls from two to five or six should be carefully protected from accidents. Little feet run heedlessly into danger, and little hands reach out to unknown perils. In 1925 more than 1600 children between two and five years of age died from burns, and over 250 from drowning. The little children that burned to death, or dying from poison carelessly left within the reach of grown-ups shadows over more than 1,800 homes in that year.

Though most of the accidents in which children are killed by automobiles occur among older children, almost 1,000 little children from two to five died in automobile accidents in 1925. Irresponsible children should not be made the victims of the carelessness of adults.

Mighty efforts have been put forth to save the babies. Let us continue the work by giving more training and protection to the preschool child.

THRIFT STUDY IN SCHOOLS MAKING RAPID PROGRESS

By S. W. Straus, President American Society for Thrift

Reports from all parts of the country show a rapid development during the current school year, in the teachings of thrift in the schools. Previously this work, while it had enjoyed the loyal support from school authorities, had not been reduced to textbook form. About one year ago a definite course of study was prepared for use in one eight. Inclusive, was completed by the American Society for Thrift and any school in the country desiring this course, which is the result of thirteen years of research and study, can now secure it by writing the thrift society in New York.

The latest reports show that schools from every part of the United States and even in our Insular possessions are adopting this outline in their curricula.

When the idea of teaching in the schools was first brought forward in 1918, objection was made by school authorities that the teachers were overburdened and that the instruction of a thrift nature would reduce their efficiency. The educators who worked out the course of study outline have overcome this objection, however, by using these thrift lessons in connection with other branches such as language, geography, history, arithmetic, and home economics. In this way progressive teachers and school executives have been brought into sympathy with the general plan for thrift teaching and the organization of the great body of teachers has been secured.

It is also of importance to learn that the great Parent-Teacher's Association has swung into line with this noble endeavor. Thus parents more and more are being brought to a realization of the priceless value of thrift being taught to their children in school class room.

School authorities everywhere should give attention to this mov
