CO. AGENT'S NOTES

Buy Lespedza Now

Many farmers are asking about lespedza seed. Now is when to sow it and how. Your County Agent feels that a repetition of this information in the columns of our county paper may be very beneficial at this time.

Jap clover should be seeded in March or early April. His preparation of the soil is necessary although much is needed about lespedza. It should be seeded at the rate of 1 bushel to 2 to 5 acres according to thickness of stand desired this year. This seed makes a splendid pasture crop and should be seeded on old pastures or with timothy, orchard grass or blue grass.

Buy it now and seed it soon—you can't go wrong.

WHOOPING COUGH THE KILLER

State Board of Health, Louisville, Ky., Contributed by Dr. A. T. Sandoz

This is the season of the year when whooping cough is most prevalent. Unfortunately people in general do not realize the dangerous nature of this disease. In 1927 whooping cough caused more deaths in Kentucky than any of the other acute communicable diseases of childhood—more than diphtheria, nearly three times as many as measles and nearly four times as many deaths as scarlet fever.

Whooping cough is a highly catching disease caused by an infectious germ which invades the respiratory passages. It is spread through the discharges of the nose and throat. This disease begins like an ordinary cold "on the chest." For perhaps a week or two there are no symptoms of coughing and no "whoop" but the attacks of coughing become harder as time goes on. The "whoop" which gives the disease its name may not begin for two or three weeks and sometimes there is no real "whoop" during the whole period of sickness. Yet this disease is most apt to be caught by other children early days when it is thought to be just a cold on the chest.

The Diseases Are

Children under five years old suffer most severely from whooping cough. Over one half the deaths from this disease are in babies not yet a year old and practically all of the deaths occur in children under five years of age. It is most important, therefore, to try to prevent such children from ever having it.

How To Prevent It

When whooping cough becomes prevalent in a community very young children should be kept at home. No other children should be allowed to visit at the home where they have had the disease.

If it is known that an older child has been exposed to whooping cough the best plan is to keep him away from young children in the home, by sending him to relatives or friends without children. Mr. Sandoz says, "Children who have not had the disease should not be exposed for several weeks from the time of his last exposure or until he is whooping. If it is not possible to do this he should be kept away from younger children in his home and these younger children protected by vaccination with whooping cough vaccine, or by physicians or health officer about this. While vaccination does not always prevent children catching this disease it makes the attack much lighter if it does occur.

When whooping cough is around, any child who has symptoms of a cold or cough, should be isolated and have the care of a physician. Remember, however, that it is not usually possible for a physician to make a diagnosis of whooping cough during the early stages.

The law requires that when no physician is in attendance it is the duty of the head of the household to report at once to the health officer any person who is, or who is suspected to be affected with this disease.

What To Do If Your Child Has Whooping Cough

In the first place call a physician and follow his directions carefully. Keep the sick child away from other children and keep separate all articles with which he comes in contact, or sterilize them by boiling or other means that your physician or health officer will suggest.

The health officer may permit well children in a family where there is whooping cough to attend school if they have had the disease that the case is properly isolated. Those who have not had it must be excluded from school and contact with other children in the neighborhood where there is known case.

Remember that physicians and health officers are required by law to perform certain duties for the protection of the public health; you should co-operate with them cheerfully.

HIT-AND-RUN

(Lexington Herald)

The hit-and-run driver is one law violator who receives no sympathy even from the sentimentalists who are so solicitous of the rights of the automobile a laxity in large enforcement.

Sunday night George Eubanks, of Nicholas county, was struck and rendered unconscious by an automobile near his home on the Maysville road. The driver of the car left his victim lying on the side of the road and there he was until discovered half an hour later by pedestrians. Five of his ribs were broken. He died yesterday in a Lexington hospital.

There are, of course, instances in which motorists may strike pedestrians without knowing of such an accident, although usually this occurs in the case of excessive speeding.

The driver of an automobile which strikes a victim entirely by accident while not breaking speed limits or driving recklessly and who stops and lends all possible and merits sympathy, but the hit and run driver is a menace to all who dare venture upon the road.

CAPTAIN MARCH

I see him come as a boy whose cheeks Are red with the wine of youth—
A lad in the land of the brawling creeks,
In the land of the lanes, forsooth.
I see him come as a young fellow
Skipping and racing about—
The cow-wheat of the spring
Who knows what the world is about.
He is fishing lines and an old bobber
He is hot of wind and sun.
He is memories of the long ago
When my feet were fain to run;
He is Captain March of the boyhood dream,
And the willows are wands that rise
Over him a soldier-plume
Of smiles in the shower-swept skies
He is helter-skelter and skip-about
He is many-hued as the grass
He is quotin and tops and the merry shout
Of marbles and eyes-aglow;
He is breathing beauty of morning's hour
When somewhere a robin sings;
And a man grows up to the magic power
And feels like spreading his wings.
