SEVENTY-ONE DEAD IN GEORGIA STORM

At least 71 persons were killed and hundreds injured in a series of tornadoes that late Thursday and that night swept four south Georgia communities, severed northeastward over the Atlantic seaboard and reappeared at two cities in South Carolina.

Hundreds of persons were made homeless when their homes were demolished. Property damage to crops will run into the thousands of dollars.

The winter appeared in two distinct sections. The first struck late in the afternoon near Cordele, where 30 persons were killed and more than 100 injured in collapsing homes and farm buildings. The wind descended on Barter, Ga., killing four and injuring 40, jumped to Rentz, Ga., where one life was lost and several persons injured, and then swept up the seaboard to reappear at Peiser and Anderson, S. C. Four were killed in Anderson and two at Peiser with more than a score injured.

The greatest destruction was wrought in south Georgia, 63 of the reported dead being in that section. The other six in the death list were from South Carolina.

Statesboro, Ga., county seat of Bulloch county, near Savannah, was the heaviest hit. The hospital there reported that 30 persons were known dead and many other injured.

HIGH SCHOOLS BEST FOR COLLEGE PREPARATION

That students coming to Harvard University from public schools are better prepared for college than students from private or preparatory schools is indicated by a study recently made by the university of the records here freshmen students in the classes of 1929 and 1930. It was found that 136 sons of the class of 1930 who entered as freshmen from public schools, had obtained ranks which gave them places on the dean's list, and 68 had unsatisfactory records. Of 411 freshmen in the same class who came from private schools, 33 were placed on the dean's list, and 92 had unsatisfactory records. In the class of 1930 the number of freshmen students who entered from public schools was either just about the same as those who entered from private schools, but the number of those from public schools who hit the end of their freshman year were quite a few. The first 3 groups of the rank list, was greater by 34 than the number who came from private schools. It was further found that public-school men in this group contributed 56 freshmen to the number of those who had unsatisfactory records, and 10 fewer to those whose connection with the college was severed. Of the 68 men who in 1927 entered the freshmen class from public schools, 2 were placed on the dean's list, 2 made unsatisfactory records, and 11 had their connections with the college severed.

THE NESTING OF BIRDS

A thousand hills are ready now; the grove
Are winnow'd by a thousand fluttering wings.
While all the feather'd race their annual rites
Ardent begin, and choose where best they build.
With more than human skill; some cautious seek
Sequester'd spots, while some, more confident,
Scaze ask a covert. . . .
Those to the hedge repair; with velvet down
Of budding willows beautifully white.
The ravens-loving West hasten to seek
The verdant shelter of the hollow stump.
And with congenial moss, harmless deceit,
Constructs a safe abode. On topmost boughs
The glossy Raven and the hoarse-voiced Crow,
Hock'd by the storm, erect their airy nests.
The Ouzel, lone frequenter of the grove
Fragrant pines, in solemn depth of shade
Finds rest; or 'mid the holly's shining leaves,
A simple bush the piping Thrush contents.
Though, in the woodland concert, he shall
Trills from his spotted throat a powerful strain.
And scorns the humbler choir. The Lark, too, asks
A lowly dwelling, hid beneath a turf,
Or hollow, trodden by the sinking hoof.
Songster of heaven! who to the sun such lays
Pours forth, as earth ne'er owns.

An Adventure of the Scarlet Pimpernel

By Baroness Orczy

SUCH episodes as are treated in this thrilling story could never occur nowhere else than in France and at no period other than that of the Revolution. The tale is of that famous band devoted to chivalry and adventure, who risked their lives time and again to save innocent victims of the tyrants who ruled France at that time.

AN ENGLISH GARDEN

(Ruth Thomy Thompson)

If I were a fay, with a wand and a day
And the whole wide world to stray in,
There's never a place I'd not go, or know,
But only one place I'd hie in:
An English garden, still and sweet,
Serene in its ancient seclusion,
Where earth and sky and sunshine meet
And pansies kiss the edges
Of pebbled walks and scarlet geraniums
Nods bedded deep in flowers,
Breathe with the winged winds
And drown through long enchanted hours.

There little rose trees stand like brides
With flower girl attendants,
Dressed in green with grace in cob-webbed lace
All hung with drop pendants.
The fairy fingers of the breeze
On blossomed keyboard playing
Send lavendar unspraying!

An English garden, there I'd hie
And there in some heavenly spring
Swing, swing, swing, swing
And there in a shower of sound and song
I'd lovingly spend my days
Watching the flash of a butterfly's wing
Lost in a garden haze!
