ENNNARED

Last summer, while the days were gold,
And cool winds held no biting hint
Of churlish winter's snarling cold,
I gathered fruit and made a store
Of jams and jellies. How on row
Upon my shelves the glasses gleam—
Proof of my labor, something they glow.

Now here are pears and apricots;
Here, jilted damsons, quinces, grapes,
Which I shall bend to winter season
In honey-colored splendor stands.
I shall not heed (as winter passes)
These cold, gray days—for I have caged
Warm sunshine in my jelly glasses!

"Traffic laws are violated more than any one with the possible exception of the 18th amendment. The traffic law was made solely for the protection of human life and is violated frequently by both driver and pedestrian. The objects of city officials to place safeguards in the course of our traffic regulations is indeed praiseworthy. Traffic rules are enforced by the police and each regulation is made to conform exact a certain character of conduct. For instance, the red and green stop and go signals are for the protection of pedestrians in crossing streets. Traffic rules are followed on certain heavy traffic intersections for protection of both driver and pedestrian. Fast driving and also signs at intersections and boulevard streets are also helpful; thus numerous accidents are prevented by drivers having to come to a full stop before crossing a boulevard or through a street.

"County and state boards are plainly marked with signs showing curves, bridges and other dangerous conditions in the road. When men are at work this fact is plainly noted by signs requesting the motorist to drive slowly and carefully.

"I believe drivers should be warned against not heeding signal lights, fast driving. U turns and coming into boulevard streets in the cities. In the country drivers should not pass another car at a curve or hump in a hill where the driver could not see an approaching car. Also by giving proper share of the roadway and not by crowding.

"It is my opinion that respect for traffic laws can be obtained by punishing offenders with a fine large enough to make them remember in the future. Our own city has lately made remarkable strides in curbing traffic violations by strictly enforcing the law and our people now know that if they violate laws, they must pay their fines."

And advertised soap
Put an advertised underwear
Seat themselves at the table
