Mankind's Advence Seen in Honor Paid to Dead

The civil respect shown to the departed, often to the exaggerated extent, is a sign of the growth of any one country. It is international, and very old. Even the savage tribes of the world have noted in the Horse-drawn hearse paid to dead chiefs, and the fact that either the possessions of the dead were deported.

The people nearly all of earth, the tribes of some, based by African, aborigines of Australia, the Indians of Indian and the rest of wilderness in the Pacific Ocean, the Chinese, the Japanese, the Indian and nomadic tribes, the Arabs of the desert, the Mongolians of Mongolia, and Mongolia, were heavily furnishers of the mighty pyramids and temples of the ancient pharaohs, and the mausoleum of the emperors of Rome, the Tomb of Rome to Rome to the days of the Roman Empire, the Tomb of Napoleon, the Tomb of Westminster abbey, where for 1,000 years the dust of the kings of England, the greatest number of immortal persons ever gathered in one place, just in the whole library of mankind.—Detroit News.
