Just Letting The Old Bean Ramble.

Random thoughts while driving: Sunshine for a day. How it perks up the drooping spirits. And how Winter does linger in the lap of Spring. Its lonely — - Honey's market. A green green in February, is now brown and sere and must start all over again. A fate that Farmers many of us these last days. - - - The Future Farmers have erected a sign at the foot of Brayfield's hill: "Welcome to Carlisle—A Little Town With a Big Heart." A good sign. No kinder folk live anywhere—and no poorer. I sometimes think. I always feel at home there as a consequence. - - - The ancient arched stone bridge at the foot of Brayfield's hill reminds me that my father has often told me of the horse running away down this hill, he his father and grandfather went to Cynthiana to see if relatives were safe. After the battle (was during the Civil War). The excitement restored grandma's failing eyesight. Or was it his heart-pretend grandpa's failing eyesight. Or was it his heart-pretend grandpa's failing eyesight. Or was it his heart-pretend grandpa
