Predicts Will Have 100 Majority In Next House

Representative Byrns, of Tennessee, chairman of the Democratic national committee, considers that a "conservative estimate of the Democratic majority in the next house is 100." Three months ago I predicted we Democrats would have at least 50 to 75 more seats in the house than it was too conservative," Byrns said. "Reports from the eastern, southern and western states convince me we will have a majority of at least 100 and possibly more."

Byrns said that "even in California, President Hoover's own state, and in Iowa, the state of his birth, the Democrats will win many seats." He added:

"Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, the Dakotas, Nebraska, Oregon, Colorado, Washington, and other normal Republican territory will send more Democrats to the house than they ever have before, according to my information."

In addition, Byrns said, "indications are that six Democrats at least will win in Pennsylvania, while nearly all of the Ohio seats are going to be occupied by Democrats in the seventy-third congress."

"Reports from Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas and Montana indicate the Democratic nominees are receiving substantial support," he continued. "The same is true in border states, with one or two exceptions, will send solid Democratic delegations."

"Several seats will be picked up in New Jersey, New York and the New England states, in addition to the two already in the Democratic column from Maine."

Wets Claim They Will Have Majority In Next Congress

The Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform at New York have issued a prohibition report on questionnaires sent candidates for the United States senate and house with the comment by Mrs. Charles H. Sabin, national president, that "a large wet Democratic majority in the Seventy-third congress has indicated."

The organization, which set out to query all candidates for congress, announced it had received 228 replies from Democrats that for and 120 from Republicans; that 227 of the Democrats favored outright repeal and one opposed it; that 105 Republicans favored repeal, 23 were opposed to it, and 42 gave answers which the organization statement listed as "evasive."

The candidates were asked if they would support repeal of the Eighteenth amendment and the restoration to each state of its power to regulate liquor traffic.

Replies were tabulated from 23 states, including Kentucky: Republicans, 3 no; Democrats, 9 yes.

Mayesville Man Killed Woman Badly Injured

Daniel Fitzgerald, 54, well known Mason county farmer, was killed instantly and a woman was critically injured at 1:30 o'clock Sunday morning in an automobile accident on the Flemingsburg road near Mayville. The woman, Katherine Nace, 32, Maysville, sustained fractures of the left arm and a broken left leg. Bryan Webb, 20, driver of the machine, escaped serious injury.

The accident occurred near the home of the woman when Webb lost control of the machine. The car crashed into the side of the bridge over Limestone creek and plunged down a 40-foot embankment into the bed of the creek.

Roosevelt Opposes A Return Of The Saloon

Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt's opposition to the repeal of the saloon was voiced in a letter received and made public by Mrs. Elizabeth S. Rose, of Louisville.

In his letter to Miss Rose, Governor Roosevelt said that:

"I presume you understand that if the Eighteenth amendment is repealed, the enactment of the necessary laws to prevent the return of the saloon will rest with the legislatures of the individual states. I am not in favor of the return of the saloon and will urge the adoption of measures which will control the sale of intoxicants through state monopolies."

Governor Roosevelt attached to his letter the prohibition plank of the Democratic national convention, noting that "I am for this platform 100 percent."

In making public the letter, Miss Rose stated that she felt it was adequate answer to persons who had criticized Governor Roosevelt unjustly for his stand on prohibition.

U. S. Short Four Million At End Of First Quarter

The government ended the first quarter of its 1933 fiscal year with a deficit of $400,000,000. The quarter concluded September 30 and the treasury statement for September 30 issued Saturday showed it had collected in the three months a total of $431,483,930, spending meanwhile $831,913,930. The total shortage was $402,230,914, about $20,000,000 less than the deficit accumulated in the time last year.

The receipts were $157,000,000 less than collected in the same period of last year but the expenditures also were less by $188,000,000.

The new taxes levied in the billion dollar tax bill last month began to produce sizeable sums, and for the quarter the miscellaneous internal revenues, under which most of the new taxes are collected, showed a gain of $26,000,000, for a total of $167,460,627.

However, internal revenue dropped $139,000,000 to $173,624,958. Customs duties also fell off sharply, amounting to $27,862,360. For the three months against $107,268,600 for the same period last year.

While the income from the new taxes has been much less than the quarterly average of the $1,100,000,000 annually revenue they were estimated to yield, the increase last month here and there indicated the prospect that the taxes would increase steadily for some time.

The reduction in expenditures brought about by the economy program, while amounting to less than materially by the outlays for relief of unemployment and business and reconstruction.

Absence Of Republican Speakers Of Note

Absence of Republican campaign speakers of note in Kentucky has occasioned comment by the Democratic party quarterly of spell-binders within the party, which has been issued sent to the state men whose names appear in it.

It is noted, however, that one speaker, the Hon. Robert H. McNeill, Washington attorney, who is a friend of the state in behalf of Hoover in 1928 is to again lend his voice to the Republican candidate.

Mr. McNeill emphasized the religious issue in the campaign four years ago. He made an especial appeal to the women in the former campaign, telling them that failure to elect Hoover would result in disaster to their homes, has of jobs for their husbands. He stated at that time that Mr. Hoover had deep convictions against prohibition, was for repeal and would uphold the prohibition law.

The distinguished attorney is said to be an effective speaker before negro audiences. Few of the negro leaders realize that Mr. McNeill lent his assistance to secure confirmation of Judge J. J. Parker to the supreme court bench. The appointment met the ire of confirmation, due in a measure, to opposition from some negro leaders who regard him as unfriendly to their race.

It is noted that Mr. McNeill is being booked for speaking engagements in Ohio and will appear primarily in towns of the industrial Little publicity has been given his coming.

BURNING UP FARM PROSPERITY

The farmer is one of the worst sufferers from fire.

It is estimated that the farm fire waste totals $100,000,000 a year, and in rural communities of 2,500 or less reaches $160,000,000. More important than that, farm fires take 3,500 irreplaceable lives.

The magnitude of the $100,000,000 loss is difficult to visualize. It would build 50,000 houses costing $2,000 each —enough to house 300,000 people. These structures, standing end to end, would form a wall 400 miles in length. The replacement of these buildings requires 500,000 acres of forest each year.

Farm fires are a luxury we cannot afford. The only conceivable dollar waste is an influence opposed to agricultural prosperity goes without saying. Worst of all, as Bailey, 19 per cent of that waste—$80,000,000 and 2,800 lives—is entirely unnecessary.

The solution is unremitting care, plus development of first-class rural fire-fighting units capable of controlling farm fire hazards. It won't be long now until Fire Prevention Week —and the American farmer should be one of the most attentive "students" of the fire problem during that time.

Don't Expect Too Much From Cold "Remedies"

In autumn people remain indoors more, and susceptibility to colds increases. The hatred is greater also because, with the opening of school, contagious and infectious diseases are more prevalent.

Those maladies, such as measles, and other diseases common to childhood, generally appear with symptoms resembling those of a cold at first. Dr. F. J. Cullen, of the Federal Food and Drug Administration, Washington, should be on their guard against such cures and beware of the empty promises ordinarily used for cold remedies of no value in the treatment of more serious diseases.

"For many years scientists have been working to find the cause and proper treatment of colds," Doctor Cullen said today, but their work has been of little avail. There are hundreds of cold remedies on the market for colds but their main benefits are to relief from some of the symptoms. The individual must trust to more rational measures to remove the underlying causes.

"Some manufacturers, through their advertising, lead a trusting public to believe that their products will not only relieve colds, but likely prevent pneumonia, sinus infections, and other serious sequelae. Such declarations are not based on facts. While manufacturers of these remedies are taking regulatory action against practices deceptive to the relief of symptom of a cold, it is removing from the market preparations falsely represented as having value as a curative remedial value in the treatment of diseases such as influenza, the symptoms of which are similar to colds."

Home-Grown Feed Needed To Make Cows Profitable

Farmers who would make money from dairying under present conditions must not only have good cows but also must use mostly home-grown feed, according to a statement which the College of Agriculture, Lexington, has made public. The eight herds containing 195 cows in Fayette county, for instance, averaged from 244 pounds of butterfat, and 5,848 pounds of milk to 356 pounds of butterfat and 9,694 pounds of milk. The other big factor in production was the relationship of the amount of home-grown feed used. The average percent of the grain ration fed the herd with the fewest cows was 24 percent, while the only 14 percent of the grain fed the herd with the highest cost was home-grown. The college men make the following recommendations:

"To be able to meet present market prices, it is essential that a large part of the feed be grown on the farm and fed only to good cows. Good pastures are essential for cheap production. Herds with the highest cost of production are losing money at present prices of dairy products and feed. Herds that are producing milk cheaply are providing a market for a home crop on the farm and giving a fair return for labor and money invested in cows and equipment."

Discuss Treatment Of Bluegrass Soil

Wide variations in the soils of the Bluegrass region of Kentucky, especially in regard to the time and amount of lime needed, are noted in the recently published bulletin No. 331 of the Kentucky experiment station of the University of Kentucky.

Some parts of the soil of this region contain sufficient of both lime and phosphorus, while other parts are somewhat deficient in both. With these deficiencies supplied, the same soil is considered very productive and adapted to all the soils of the region, but in parts of the region lime is the limiting factor which may be relieved by the application of fertilizer. Other parts are given in this bulletin for cotton and for the need of lime and phosphorus.

The bulletin makes recommendations on soil management and fertilizer practices, including rotation of crops, and the use of legumes, application of liming materials, the need of phosphorus and potash, and the complete fertilizers for grain crops, the potassic and phosphoric fertilizing of alfalfa, and top-dressing the soil.

Copies of the bulletin may be the Experiment Station farm at Lexington and Princeton, Ky., and Mr. George Roberts and E. J. Kinney are the authors of the bulletin, which may be obtained by addressing agents or by writing to the Experiment Station.
