THE GARDEN

CERTIFIED SEED POTATO PRODUCTION

(By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture.)

By this time this year's new recruits to the use of certified seed potatoes will have learned what has become an old story to the legion Kentuckians who have long made it a practice of shunning the average seed, that planting certified seed pay tatoes pays. Why it does is no mystery; certified seed is every healthy seed, free of the diseases that cause low yields and disfigured tubers.

The seed potato crop entered for certification for 1934 is now being planted and, in order to fix ideas firmly the idea of continuing to use only certified seed potatoes, it may not be amiss to describe how this seed is produced.

Briefly, the activities of certified seed potato growers center about removing diseased hills, but many additional details are involved. First the seedstock must be good, preferably certified, or else stock whose pedigree has been established by tuber-unit or tuber-indexing methods. The tuber-unit method consists in planting selected tubers in series, each one numbered, and rejecting any units in which one sort with undesirable traits appears. By the tuber-index method, sample seed pieces of selected tubers are tested a season previous, and on the behavior of the samples depends the rejection or the retention of the "remnants" repening in cold storage. The good units and the good indexes are multiplied in a special seed plot to make the main planting for seed to be sold. So much for the seed stock.

Certified growers are urged to treat their seed for scab and black scurf, for scab makes seed potatoes unsightly and scurf reduces yields. The several ways of treating seed potatoes are described in Kentucky Circular 202.

Slightly larger seed pieces are advised than for the ordinary crop, because of greater likelihood of wilting taking place, the seed planted in dry soil as in July. Dusting the seed with sulphur is suggested to heal it and to retard its rotting because if high soil temperatures follow planting is advised, so that level cultivation may be practiced, to conserve soil moisture, delay scab in the late summer.

As soon as the plants have gotten 4 to 6 inches tall, the men begin going through their fields, alert for any hills that show any abnormality in foliage size, color or shape. For these are symptoms of disease. Ability to do this comes only after long experience. When the average height of the plants reaches 10 inches, a check-up and inspection is made by a member of the Kentucky Experiment Station staff, to decide how carefully the work of removing diseased plants has been done. At this time, the grower is told how to proceed or, if missing and diseased hills exceed 5 per cent, the suggestion is made to withdraw the field from certification.

Two weeks later, a final check-up is made to determine how well the work of removing diseased hills has been done, and if the fields are clean, they are passed to harvest, what the tuber inspection, to be made later, discloses. Tuber inspection is made for scab, scurf and for abnormally-shaped potatoes. The growers are shown what must be removed, to bring the crop to stand, and certification is complete. At this time, too, estimates are made of the amounts of seed each grower has as a guide as to the number of tags to be issued him. The tags are affixed by an official of the Growers' Association after he has satisfied himself that the stock is worthy. The tags are attached with a wire so arranged as to necessitate its breaking before the sack can be emptied. The ends of the wire are secured with a lead seal to assure the integrity of the package.

From the foregoing, it is seen that seed certification calls for care and expense on the part of the grower. This makes certified seed cost slightly more than ordinary seed, given it is worth ever so much more, at certified Kentucky tag-price.

$371,422,585 Collected 4 From Processing Tax

Commissioner of Internal Revenue Guy T. Helvering announced that the government has collected $371,522,-585.64 from the processing taxes during the first fiscal year in which they were effective. The year ended on June 30, 1934. The taxes were proceed in the following order and according to figures recently released by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, totaled up to June 30, 1934, the following amounts:

Wheat, $117,621,174.62; Cotton, $144,798,222.64; Tobacco, $18,566,-426.05; Field Corn, $4,406,139.34; Hogs, $77,034,611.24; Peanut and Rice, $244,830.79; Sugar, $170,416.37, or a total of $371,422,585.64.

It was stated at the Bureau of Internal Revenue that the disbursements from a number of these taxes substantially exceeded the collections, and makes which were made for budget purposes during the latter part of 1933.

The Bureau points out that the official estimate of the amount to be collected during the fiscal year 1934 from the entire processing tax, including collections from floor stocks and collections on account of the import compensating tax, was $128,000,000. The collections during the fiscal year actually amounted to more than $144,000,000, or more than $16,000,000 in excess of the official estimate.

Asks Non-Signers To Apply For Tax-Payment Warrants

Tobacco growers who did not sign adjustment contracts, either in the regular sign-up, or during the reopened sign-up which closed July 28, will be asked to apply for tax-payment warrants exempting them from paying the 25 per cent tax provided in the Kerr-Smith law, according to O. M. Parrington, in charge of the tobacco section of the AAA at Lexington.

Applications for tax-payment warrants should be made to county committees. Application forms have been received at the state office and are being distributed among the county offices. The excess up closed July 28, and applications for tax-warrants may be made at any time thereafter.

Mr. Parrington is also pointing out that producers signing contracts during the re-sign-up closing July 28, under provisions of the Kerr-Smith Act, will be required to bring their plantings within the acreage allotment of their contract if their present plantings are in excess of the allotment allowed under the contract, they will not be permitted to harvest their entire crop and, by signing the new grade, keep within the limits of their production allotments. In other words, they must comply with the terms of the contract in the same manner as if they signed contracts during the regular sign-up period.

CARD FROM W. J. FIELDS

Olive Hill, Ky.
July 30, 1934

Editor, Lexington Herald
Lexington, Kentucky.
Dear Sir:

In your editorial of July 21st you charge that I introduced the tobacco tax reduction bill introduced by Congressman Vinson and then branded it as the product of the mind of the "Big Four" combine and criticized the same bill. I will say for your information and the information of your readers that I took no such position. What I did was to indorse Vinson's tobacco tax reduction bill, which he did not secure passage of, and to condemn as the product of the combine, thought of the "Big Four" his horizontal cigarette tax bill, which he did secure the passage of, and which places the same tax on a ten-cent package of cigarettes manufactured by the independents which is placed on the fifteen-cent brands manufactured by the "Big Four" combine, which bill I charged would change was conceived and designed by the "Big Four" and sponsored by Mr. Vinson for the purpose of driving out of competition the "Big Four" the ten-cent cigarette manufactured by the independents and which furnishes one of our greatest revenue taxes.

In my opening speech of July 14th, which you criticize, I charged Mr. Vinson with having been a heavy borrower within the last few years from a Maysville bank the president of which is director and one of the Kentucky-Tennessee division of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company—the backbone of the "Big Four" combine—and in sixteen subsequent speeches I have charged that that bank furnished money to finance the 1932 campaign and enabled him to deny both or either of the charges. I challenge this bank has failed to make denial or even answer my charge, and as I myself am unable to get a straight answer from Vinson on the charges, I have made, and now repeat, the charge in speech with a public denial or admission of said charges.

Hoping fully,
W. J. Fields

Pure, clean drinking water should be kept before pigs. Dirty ponds are often are the medium by which disease infections and worm infestations are carried. For this reason care should be taken to supply good drinking water in such a way that the hogs cannot wallow in it.

Fertilizing with sulfate of ammonia or nitrate of soda during the summer is a recommended practice for both strawberries and raspberries. Side dress at the rate of about a pound to 50 feet of row, or 20 pounds to the tenth of an acre or 50 pounds for a quarter-acre.

Floors and floor coverings are the foundation and partial background of rooms, and should be darker in value than the walls and the general effect of the furnishings, thus helping to give a feeling of strength and security.

Hundreds of Kentucky farms could be equipped with this type of water system. Write to the College of Agriculture for detailed information.
