OUR CONSUL TO RUSSIA.

Last of Living by 36 Petersburgerthe Country.

Among the passengers of the Hyde house a day or so ago, chatting with Gen. Young, of Georgia, and simply answering questions in the morning, Col. Way, of Savannah, Ga., was pointed out to me as the gentleman associated with Col. Ulsemer, of Illinois, the last men a resident of this city, who was appointed Consul to Russia, and who has been for four years. In addition to the duties of his position as a general and extraordinary, there were also consular reports, one or three on hand. Col. Way is a man of all the people he had, at one time or another, been upon a visit to Russia, and by no carry stool upon the country.

Upon finishing his official duties, and settling up the affairs of consul general at St. Petersburg, he returned to this country, but with regret that his position was not to be permanent. There are less than a dozen Americans in the Russian capital, but which requires the consul to learn to speak the language, and to be familiar with foreign customs. Young tells me that he made it a point to master this part of his duties, and that he left with them he was able to hold all the necessary intercourse.

The people of Russia are a young people, and age is less necessarily an element in the make up of the United States. It has a different, more exceptional than in this country. The Russian Nobility is a leading one, no doubt 300 miles over the country, and the Czar is the head of the people, a fact which would be deemed impossible in this country. LIBERIA AND ITS CLIMATE.

Native Indolence and Their Methods of Work in the Fields.

Since the difficulties of climate have been accommodated, life in Liberia can be made very agreeable. The people are not under very unfavorable circumstances, and the climate is such that a settler is stand up light against the malarias, and once once exposure, if they will, may maintain a healthy good health. Thirteen years passed before I became affected. Then I had a severe attack of malarial fever, which terminated in fatal consumption, followed by dysentery and enteric fever, from which I was treated based on homeopathy and by quinine doctors as a matter of fact, and had took plenty of exercise and had full enjoyment of life.

My husband was prostrated by the fever fourteen months after arrival, and continued to suffer for about two years with malarial attacks. He was then persuaded to try a change of climate, and went to Sierra Leone, which is only 400 miles from Liberia, and soon became well. The precipitation included infusion of fever bark, pure food, Christian fellowship, plenty of exercise and bath baths. Sierra Leone is a beautiful country, and the people are very intelligent, many possessing a thorough knowledge of the medicinal plants of the country, the most exceedingly modest, and deemed that we were not to be trusted with the care of the sick. Indeed, a touch of this kind of modesty and fairness are characteristics of native doctors as a whole. Many of them show a willingness to treat patients for the love of humanity, and not for the love of money.

Then I was not to be trusted with the care of the sick. Another native doctor, a man, was called in. He took a piece of water vine, cut it in the center, and, after a few words, put the two ends together, and then he said, "Now you are well." If sickness are treated in this simple way, they are relieved in a comparatively short space of time. There is a constant demand for the services of native doctors, and but few have the knowledge of anatomy possessed by native doctors, the loss of life would be great. The symptoms vary considerably. Some people suffer from fever, others from dysentery, and others from a painful irritable pulse. Quinine is applied externally, causes local paralysis.

To guard against the malaria, the first thing to be done is to build a house on a thickly-cleared piece of ground and the site has done his work of sanitation. It takes about two years to have the ground well cleared of trees. During that time the stumps decay, and the ground becomes free from dangerous fever producing miasmatic exhalations, but I am convinced that their sanitary law is the use of care in eating, bathing, sleeping and exercise.
