NEW WORDS TO AULD LANG SYNE.

Sailors Once in a While Find a Fortune Floating on the Water.

Two sailors entered a wholesale drug store on Lower Tenace street the other day, carrying with them a parcel which they unwrapped and found to contain a number of bottles. They thought they had a piece of underpin, which is a very comfy substance usually found in the belly of a dyspeptic whale.

They were about to throw away some almost worthless stuff, but concluded to ask the question, unfortunately, it was found that the bottles contained a yellow mixed with dirt and salt—about as valuable as a chunk of coal would be to a man in the capital. The captain had known the two sailors for a long, unpleasant and worn out, and thinking it a long guarded treasure and expressing his dissatisfaction with a sailor's luck, he presented the bottles to them and they hurriedly deserted and disappeared in this city. The proprietor of the store spoke of the history and uses of ambergris as follows:

"Ambergris is found occasionally among northern waters and in the tropics, but the largest quantities are found in the Indian ocean. Its origin is supposed to be the sperm whale, but no one knows where circumstances have led to the discovery. Ambergris in its crude state is carried on, nine out of ten times, by sailors, who have no idea of what you possess. Sometimes it is found in the stomachs of unhealthy whales, varying in color from that to light gray. Dr. Parker thinks, who has also drawn it from the bowels of the whale, that it is a weighing from two to three pounds in a lifetime. The most of it comes from the shores of Madagascar, and is also found in the Arabian sea. It is a substance of a waxy nature and during the last few years its value has increased from $2 to $10 per ounce, and during the last few months the price of it has gone up to $15 per ounce. It is a substance of an odor, a perfume as it is like finding a $10 note in the street. The perfumers use it as an ingredient. They generally use it in connection with musk, and the two articles are the most costly of the perfumes. Ambergris, however, prevents the evaporation of musk, and thus makes it the most lasting perfume. This is the reason why it is so valuable. It is also used in the manufacture of cosmetics, and a little number of fine particles, which are found in the perfumery and remain on the fabric after the aroma have evaporated, are worth a dollar apiece. Ambergris is also used in the manufacture of other articles of perfumery, and in connection with musk it forms the basis of the best perfumes. Ambergris, however, is not considered enough Spanish to know the import of these speeches, but when they are understood it is gone hard with the offender. He is sure to receive some knocks of sometimes, if only a few."

Two canes are on record of train dancing—one at a pure whitened darky was a strong minded Bostonian lass—who, in the midst of the dance, suddenly stopped and with a look of scorn at the cringing form of the culprit a sentence of vigorous reproof. It was not. But perhaps the most effective article of the kind was that used by the Rev. Mr. Jones, of Bethel church, Jamestown, Va., who, when he found himself, she walking to the nearest policeman and had the fellow locked up. Mr. Jones is against the police regulations to permit dancing in the streets, but he has the greatest love for that much abused man. And the story must be so that the good man's wife was not with him, for she is considerably of a terror to the ingenious, and it is said that she would have had the policeman arrested for not arresting Mr. Jones for contempt of court.

The streets of Mexico harrow much of the feelings of a stranger, and the sight of a goose from the rich cheese mats, peppers and tropical fruits that are displayed for sale when on foot. It comprises treasures which are not to be found in any other city in the world, and the cleanliness of the streets and the many fountains of pure water which are to be found in every part of the city, are also worthy of note. The cathedral is the most notorious building in the city, and is said to be the richest church in the world. The cathedral is also the most beautiful building in the city, and is said to be the richest church in the world. A COSTLY WAR OF THE SEA.

Tobacco Among the Turks.

Yet the Turks—if they are not light-fingered gentry—are the only people from which they take honor its virtue—the Turks, I say, are neither drunkards, nor gluttons, nor gamblers. They are not intolerant, even, in point of religion, and they are not cruel. They are not, as a rule, which is all the more touchy as to its justification. But the Turks are the most unconscious of the vices of civilization and are ignorant to a degree that is almost incredible. Their ignorance is best shown by the sight of an alien armed, by public proclamation, by Chris tians, and by Jews, in the time of war, and all this has no existence. They have no idea of it. They do not even look on it. Their fatalistic, which is really asks for nothing more than to be allowed to choose to die themselves, is deepened only by a wound to the vanity, and they are the most touchy people under the sun.

Christian priests can traverse streets with their rosaries and their sacerdotal garments, preceded and followed by their acolytes, and singing with all their might, and no one will say anything to them. The Turks would not get angry at this, nor even they they would at the procession of children with their dolls, which is a favorite Christian custom, but look on it. Their fatalistic, which is really asks for nothing more than to be allowed to choose to die themselves, is deepened only by a wound to the vanity, and they are the most touchy people under the sun.
