BORDEAUX MIXTURE

(By John G. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture.)

A most valuable garden help is Bordeaux mixture. It is used mostly for the black flea beetle which ridules potatoes, eggplant, and tomato leaves with small holes, causing the untimely death of these vegetables and resulting in curtailed yields, or in no yield at all. Bordeaux Mixture is a preventive for the leaf spots and blights of these same crops, and the bulbous-rooted and spot of beans as well.

The strength customarily used is 4-4-50, which being translated means: 4 pounds of bluestone, 4 pounds of "lime" lime or 4 pounds of hydrated lime, and 50 gallons of water. Bordeaux mixture may be bought in powder form to be dissolved in water following directions given with the container; but a better and cheaper product may be made at home from the original ingredients. Home mixing of Bordeaux may seem complicated, though really it is not, made according to the directions here given:

The first step is to make a bluestone "stock solution," as follows: Dissolve one pound of bluestone in 5 quarts of water. Bluestone can be dissolved in warm water and with much stirring, but an easier way is to hang it in a sack over the surface of water in such a way that the tip of the sack is immersed in the water about an inch. In this way the bluestone may dissolve with no further attention in about 1 hours, or during the night before the day spraying is to be done. The container should not be metal, for bluestone eats metals. Make the stock solution in a 2-gallon crock, pour in one quart of the "stock solution," and rock the sprayer back and forth to assure mixing. Next, put in 1-4 pound of hydrated lime, close the tank and shake it anglwise 20 times. The Bordeaux, 2 1-2 gallons of 4-4-50 strength, is now ready.

Bordeaux spraying is in effect similar to the healthy leaves against attack from the disease spores or "germs." To be effective, spraying must be thorough, the entire plant being covered. Although a sprinkling can may be used, a sprayer that transforms the spray into a driving mist is much to be preferred. A good job has been done when the tips of the leaves begin to drip.

As the plants grow, cracks in this protective film appear, and new foliage appears which needs to be protected for that reason, later sprayings must be given, if the spreading of disease is to be prevented. Bordeaux spraying should accordingly follow a "program," which is as follows:

The first spray should be given when the first signs of spotting is seen on the lowest, oldest leaves. Two weeks later, if the season is a normal one, or 10 days later if the season is moist and growth rapid, the second application should be made. This should be followed, two weeks later, or 10 days later, if a third spraying, and after a similar interval, even a fourth. The gardener should keep in mind that in warm, muggy weather the spread of the leaf spots is more rapid than when the season is warm and sunny, but he should not be too sanguine about the matter, but he should repard Bordeaux Mixture as crop insurance, cheap and easy to make, withal.

MOBBER TO MEET DEATH

Fred Lockhart, who moved recently from death at the hands of an infuriated mob, identified himself as a participant in the sensational Lee Frank lynching in Georgia in 1913, says a Shreveport dispatch. Lockhart, who was a boy of 17 years old, a fellow-mob member, turned from reading the Bible to tell that he drove the automobile which carried Frank from the Georgia prison at Milledgeville to the place of lynching at Marietta, Ga.

"I was now how Frank felt when he was taken from the Georgia prison and hanged," said Lockhart.

Leo Frank, a young man and a college graduate, whose home was in Brooklyn, N. Y., was lynched August 17, 1913, after his death sentence had been commuted to life imprisonment by the Governor of Georgia, had been commuted to life. Lockhart said he was a member of the mob which battered its way into the Milledgeville prison to get Frank.

LIFE

(W. M. Varies)

Life is too brief
Between the budding and the falling leaf,
Between the seed time and the golden sheaf,
For hate and spite,
We have no time for malice and for slight,
Therefore, with love make beautiful the deed,
Past speeds the night.

Life is too swift
Between the blossom and the white snow's drift;
Between the silence and the lark's uplift
For bitter words,
In anger and in gentleness our speech
Must carry messages of hope and reach
The sweetest words.

Life is too great
Between the infant's and the hoary head's
Between the shaking of earth's gyrife and fate,
For petty things,
Lo! we shall yet—who creep with cumbered feet
Walk glorious over heaven's golden street,
God and our kings.
