Kentucky Corn Crop Smaller This Year

Kentucky's crop conditions October 1 indicated the production of a corn crop about one per cent smaller than the 1927-31 average, and a total tobacco crop of all types about 14 per cent smaller than in 1933, according to the October crop report of the U. S. Division of Crop and Livestock Estimates. Kentucky corn this year is exceedingly variable but the bulk of it is good. The United States corn crop is expected to be about 67,366,000 bushels compared to 66,175,000 bushels last year and the 5-year average annual production of 2,291,000 bushels 1927-31 from all types in this state. The United States corn production is estimated at 1,416,772,000 bushels compared to 2,343,000,000 last year and an average annual United States production 1927-31 of 2,516,207,000 bushels.

Kentucky's tobacco crop of all types combined, this season is estimated at:—284,664,000 pounds compared to last year's crop of 330,315,000 pounds and a 5-year average annual production of 271,281,000 pounds 1927-31 from all types in this state. The United States tobacco crop of all types this season is estimated at 1,991,944,000 pounds compared to 2,185,107,000 pounds last year and a 5-year average annual production of 1,875,556,000 pounds 1927-31 inclusive.

Kentucky's oat crop is estimated at 17,760,000 bushels this season compared to 1,912,000 bushels last year, and an average annual crop 1927-31 of 4,376,000 bushels.

Tame hay, including all kinds, in Kentucky is estimated at 1,193,000 tons compared to 1,260,000 tons last year.

Apples in this State are estimated at only 896,000 bushels compared to 2,240,000 bushels last year.

All these 1934 estimates are subject to revision either upward or downward later, depending on whether conditions are found to warrant changes in the estimates.

Expect Good Hens To Be Profitable

Farmers owning good laying hens and producing most of their eggs may expect a profit from poultry this fall and winter and probably next year, speakers said at the 11th annual poultry field day at the Agricultural Experiment Station of the University of Kentucky at Lexington.

However, feed prices are so high that there probably will be little money made from common flocks, especially if grain must be purchased.

There now are 3 per cent fewer hens on farms than a year ago and 7 per cent fewer than the 5-year average. Production is 6 to 10 per cent under a year ago and 15 per cent below the five-year average.

Dr. J. Holmes Martin, head of the poultry department, told the visitors at the meeting that the Experiment Station is saving the poultry raisers thousands of dollars annually by telling them what not to buy and keeping them against worthless remedies, paying up money for things that could be produced on their own farms, and protecting them against get-rich-quick methods.

W. D. Termohlen, a representative of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and D. D. Slade, president of the Kentucky Commercial Baby Chick Association and chairman of the hatchery trade practice committee, discussed codes and other methods of adjusting poultry production.

ABOUT THE FARM

(Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station.)

The best pullets mature early and begin to lay early. They lay steadily throughout the year. The kind not to keep mature late and begin to lay late in the fall, and then stop laying early the next summer.

Clean irons are necessary for good results in ironing clothes. Common irons can be washed and then rubbed with sand paper, emery cloth or Brillo. Irons can be polished with emery paper and then washed and rubbed with wax.

There is enough fertilizer value in tobacco stalks to warrant spreading them under shelter until spring. They should not be spread now for about the time spring growth begins. Figured at commercial fertilizer prices, tobacco stalks are worth $10 a ton.

Every child over 2 years of age should have a quart of milk a day to provide for growth and for building bones and muscles. Some of this milk may be eaten in custards, puddings, cereals and cocoa. Butermilk may take the place of milk if plenty of butter is served.

Oil drained from the crank case of an automobile or tractor may be used to protect parts of machinery that tend to rust during the winter. Apply with a paint brush or cloth. Trousses and other wood parts should be painted in the fall.

Water is the most necessary and yet one of the most inexpensive livestock foods. More farmers are putting down wells or improving springs and ponds every year. Write the College of Agriculture at Lexington for concrete water trough plans.

German scientists have perfected a method of extracting the cellulose fibers from wood in such a condition that they form a satisfactory substitute for cotton, wool and silk.

Close Shave

CHE was young and very pretty. Almost hidden by an assortment of packages she lowered them into enough to make the old drugstore clerk who smiled back, rembind about half of some one else young and fair who used to smile at him that way many years ago.

"May I have two nickels?" she asked trying a ten-cent piece on the counter. "I'd like to talk to you."

"Certainly," said Doc Putnam cheerily, adding: "We have two telephone booths, one in the rear and one at the front. Take your pick."

"I'll take the one in the rear," she smiled, gathering her bundles together.

"It doesn't matter which one you use," the druggist's eyes twinkled, "I can hear everything you say."

Laughing gaily, she entered the booth. As she pulled the number, Doc listened idly. Some lucky young boy-friend was about to be called, he guessed, perhaps informed that dinner would be late because his darling had been delayed while shopping. Poor emmy! Doc listened as the pretty voice passed in and out of his drug store day after day and generally his grouses were right.

"Is this Bishop 7-3333?" the girl was speaking. "This is Mary. Yes, John was supposed to phone me at exactly five o'clock and I'll never be alive on time. Yes, I'll give you the number the phone booth and he can call me here. Ready?"

Doc he wrong, thought the old druggist proudly and turned to greet two new customers. A blond, rather overdressed, and an attractive young man.

He entered the phone booth in the front of the store and the blond gave a seat by the soda fountain. As the druggist experimented with a new plaster which had fallen down, he heard the young man in the booth give the operator a number.

Suddenly Doc listened to attention. It was the same number called by the girl in the rear of the store.

"This is John, is Mary there?" the young man was saying in a voice easily distinguishable to all Doc Putnam.

"Yes, yes," the voice was suddenly impatient, "Let me talk to the telephone O. K. Thanks. Good, I'll call her at her place." The receiver clicked as he hung up.

"With you let me have some nickels, please?" the young man had swung open the door of the booth and was holding a dime in the general direction of the drugstore. Doc selling at the blond.

Much shaking knows the old man made change and the young man dropped in the phone and called the number in the back booth where he's talking to Mary.

In a few minutes things would be popping in the store and Doc wondered what would happen when the husband would take. And what of the blond? He turned and regarded her as she sat impatiently tapping her foot and puffing a cigarette.

But the telephone conversation broke in on his thoughts.

"Hello, Mary, this John? Yes, yes, I know. I was very sorry, but I couldn't get home until late—delayed downtown, you know."

There was a pause. "I know I promised her—"

Suddenly Doc Putnam was angry. Suddenly he hated the frivolous blond girl, tapping her foot so impatiently, so sure of herself and the man she waited for. They were cheaters, that's what they were!

What would happen when the phone conversation ended and those two stepped out into the drug store with a? All the drama of the sweet-faced girl in the back of the store would come crashing down about her. It would be a crash that would shake. A limp rose in the old man's throat. Suddenly he determined that it would not happen.

The rear phone booth opened, and the girl came out. Picking up her bundles, she tripped toward the door. Then she caught sight of the young man standing in the door of the front phone booth.

"Why, John—" her laughter bubbled out—"What a coincidence. You were in that phone booth all the time?"

"Mary!" He was both surprised and frightened.

The blond, who had been staring at the girl indignantly, stepped forward. But a firm hand grasped her arm.

"Mrs. Smith," said old Doc Putnam, loudly, "this is probably the best cure for your ailment."

He had seized a bottle from a shelf and was shaking it before her.

"That's his wife," he whispered, in a bassoo undertone.

Bewildered, the blond was staring at the wife and cross-bones on a bottle of iodine.

In the background, Doc was dimly conscious of the strained voice, and the stammering of the girl.

As the husband walked out with his wife, he half turned. Without glancing at the blond, his eyes riveted on the face of the old druggist, and in their depths was mingled a story of contrition and gratitude.

Show Farm Income Increase Over Low Levels Of 1932-33

Farm income, including rental and benefit payments, for the third quarter of 1934 has increased $197,000,000 over the third quarter of 1933 and $205,000,000 over the same period in 1932, according to Mordecai Ezekiel, economic advisor to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

For the three months, June, July and August, 1934, total farm income in the United States, including $133,000,000 in rental and benefit payments, was $1,508,000,000 as compared to $1,316,000,000 in June, July and August 1933 and $912,000,000 in the same period of 1932, an increase of 65 per cent in two years.

This is the highest three-month level reached since the rise which started in the second quarter of 1933 but still 22 per cent below the pre-depression level. Income for the three months of August, 1934, including rental and benefit payments, averaged approximately 80 per cent above the low level of the first quarter of 1933. These comparisons take into account the usual seasonal changes in farm marketings.

While farm income increases have been partially offset by the increases in price of commodities which farmers purchase, the net increase is encouraging. Prices paid by farmers in August 1934 averaged 30 per cent above the level of March, 1933. This indicates that the purchasing power of farm products in exchange for commodities had a net increase of approximately 44 per cent, according to Mr. Ezekiel.

Higher prices that farmers are now receiving and a larger total of rental and benefit payments are expected to sustain the level of farm income and effect the reduction in the volume of farm marketing due to smaller crops. During August, farmers received approximately $100,000,000 payments and from the sale of cattle and from benefit payments, nearly 70 million dollars. Final figures on simular payments for September are expected to total approximately 85 million dollars.

NOBILITY SHROUDS NEW YORK VALLEY

Once Home of Refugee Who Feared Napoleon.

Syracuse, N. Y.—More than a century and a quarter ago in a valley in upstate New York, near Oneida, lived an Boonder's Hollow, a refugee member of France's nobility, who stood in line as a future king of that country, as said to have sought escape from Napoleon, who was making quick work of his opponents by way of the guillotine.

Here in the forest recesses of hills is a fortress-like mansion hewn from sturdy oaken trees, this Frenchman founded a settlement which after a brief, colorful existence crumbled back into forest wilds to become one of the forgotten villages of this section of New York, according to the Syracuse Post-Standard.

Built Imposing Chateau.

The story had its beginnings in 1808, when a Frenchman who called himself plain Louis Anathe Muller, and who never ventured forth without a crowned bodyguard, purchased 2,700 acres of land in this isolated region near Utica, now Oneida, and erected a imposing 130 men, when he paid in gold and silver, to construct a massive stone chateau on the summit of the highest hill in the region.

Beside a stream a mile southeast of his mansion, he built a village in Brunder's Hollow, named after John Frances Brunder, one of the men who had accompanied him to this country, and erected a blood-red rather overdressed, and an attractive young man.

He entered the phone booth in the front of the store and the blond gave a seat by the soda fountain. As the druggist experimented with a new plaster which had fallen down, he heard the young man in the booth give the operator a number.

OFFICER O'DAY looked puzzled when a stock town car slid to a stop in front of the Martin Jewelry company and the chauffeur sat wood silly indifferent while the curb other occupant fumbled with the door handle. Officer O'Day took huge steps across the sidewalk to open the door himself.

An attractive young woman met his gaze with startled eyes and a quick flush.

"Thank you so much," she murmured.

The store was deserted except for Mr. Martin and the bookkeeper busy over a ledger. Mr. Martin hurried forward to wait upon the woman.

"I'd like to see some diamond rings," she said.

Mr. Martin glanced at the woman curiously. Some of his patrons nowadays were likely to wear just slightly shabby clothes. He noticed that this customer's fashionable tan coat and hat looked new, and expensive. Even the matching parasol with its carved handle appeared unused. Whereupon Mr. Martin placed his most impressive tray of diamonds on the counter.

A strange smile lit up the woman's face as she selected a ring with perhaps half a dozen diamonds in a cluster. She tried it on.

"It's lovely," she confided in a husky voice, "I made some money, a little unexpected, and I decided I'd earned a diamond."

"An exceptional idea; excellent," Mr. Martin said, trying to appear nonchalant. She raised her hand to see the ring from every angle. At that instant the loop of the parasol slid off her arm and fell to the floor with a loud clatter. Quickly the woman bent to retrieve it.

"Some other ring," she said, "I wonder if I might care for one of these."

A worried frown came to Mr. Martin's face. Has she insulted him by asking to sell the large diamond. With anxious eyes he watched her finger the ring in question. Officer O'Day's corner Nicholas Circuit Court.

Man Gets $6 a Week: Fat Commutation!

Wrexham, England.—His fatness is worth $6 a week to James William Williams, fifty-eight-year-old author of Rhosllyn, near here.

Williams, who is an accountant by profession, has a commutation by Judge Sir Artemus Jones after doctors testified in Court by expert that owing to an accident received while working as a miner his weight had increased to such an extent that he is now unable to work.

"The practice of lending money to home owners for repairs and improvements (the purpose of the new Federal Housing Administration) was first started in 1934.

Dr. James M. Mutton, of Chicago, believes that high blood pressure can be reduced by lessening the activity of the pituitary and the adrenal glands by exposing them to X-rays.
