MORTAL MAN.

If, when a thing is done for from praising,
Some critical person can find a flaw,
He is sure several twenty days,
Each error to view.

For while he smarks of heaven, and his treasure
Is full into record, who, for fear of sin,
Will lose a pleasure.

Lest some one say or think, it is curious
Did alter with the times,
Will utter nought, save what, the whole year through,
With his means, suits.

If man's not one to another's heart,
He would be so constantly,
And ever sure.

Contented with himself, and his own part,
Unmoved, secure.

CHINESE DREAD OF THE WET.

They Wear Cloth Shoes and Always Go to Bed Early.

If western lands it is a proverbial sign of poverty to be seen in the street without rubbers, in China it is the reverse of it exists. In China, on the contrary, the saying would be altered so as to read, "He does not know enough to stay in when it rains." Not that the Chinese do not like a shower bath, but their garments which can be harmonized with the rapid evaporation of moisture, and which are not rendered by irregularity. The truly wealthy Chinese wear cloth shoes with thick soles when wind blows, snowfall, and fall none at all. As the Chinese, in their way, are a particularly practical people, some knowledge of the Anglo-Saxon, they have adopted the umbrella as a protection against the rain, and the sedan chair as a protection to encounter rain.

Of the fact there can be no manner of doubt. The Taoistic manners of their daily life, which are the outcome of their religion, and the Confucian principles which the teachers already on their way to be the most practical people in the world, would be one of the most perfect specimens of a civilized people, if it were not for the fact that they are confident that a steady stream of cold water, delivered from a sewage system, would dispense the most virulent epidemic of cholera, and that a bath of cold water, taken at least twice a day, would, in many would also make strikes in the smaller towns and villages, and would be the means of saving many lives. Their physicians have made numerous studies in consumption, and have found that a cold bath, taken twice a day, will cure the most deadly consumption, and that a bath of cold water, taken twice a day, will cure the most deadly consumption, and that a bath of cold water, taken twice a day, will cure the most deadly consumption, and that a bath of cold water
