Prisons And Paroles.

Within the memory of this writer Kentucky Governors have been abused more or less for their parole and pardon records. Much of the criticism - is from those who do not realize what a hard row any chief executive of a State has to hoe in this regard. It is one thing to criticize, it is another to listen unmoved to the appeals of mothers and wives and sisters, pleading for clemency for a son, husband or brother. One week's experience of such an ordeal would make some of the harsher critics more tolerant. Not that it is right to turn dangerous criminals loose upon society, but that we should realize how difficult it is to hold the power to grant life and condemn to death; to restore liberty or to deny it and be moved sometimes by the heart rather than the head.

Much will be said in the campaign this summer and more this fall, perhaps, of the pardon and parole record of the present State administration. It may be of interest, therefore, to learn that 93 per cent of the prisoners paroled during the term of Governor Laffoon have made good on parole, which is a very creditable showing and compares well with parole records in any State.

A little thought should convince anyone that it was far better for this 93 per cent to be given an opportunity to "come back," rather than remain herded with more hardened criminals to learn more devilry and to become embittered against society. They were paroled - prisoners are not free men; they can serve no part of their sentence while on parole, but remain on parole the rest of their lives, unless pardoned by the Governor. In most States the period of parole extends beyond the expiration of the maximum term fixed by the Court.

The parole laws of Kentucky provide that prisoners become eligible for parole as follows:

Sentences of 10 years or less—At the expiration of one-half of the sentence imposed by the Court.

Sentences of more than 10 years, but not more than 21 years—At the expiration of 5 years.

Sentences of more than 21 years, including life sentences—At the expiration of 8 years.

Parole eligibility is calculated upon flat or calendar time, without credit for good behavior. Paroled prisoners are subject to return to the institution at any time during their lives for a violation of the terms of the parole.

The necessity of paroles in Kentucky is evident to the most casual observer. Our prisons are crowded to double their capacity and so far no Kentucky Legislature has seen fit to appropriate funds for new prisons, modern institutions, or prison farms, where those imprisoned for minor offenses may be segregated from old and hardened criminals. The money's lacking for it will take a great deal of it to solve our prison problem, and that money can be "saved," despite any demagogic oratory you may hear to the contrary. It must be raised by taxes and taxes are anathema to most of us these days, or at any time.

A Better Investment.

According to a report of the State Inspector and Examiner approximately $100,000 has been received from admissions and more-interest collections for the twelve months ending June November, 1933. From State prisons of Kentucky since November, 1933. From Blue Grass of Kentucky since November, 1933. From Marrowbone received receipts of $4,556.64. Cumberland Falls, not yet accessible easily from the west, produced $1,38457 and Natural Bridge, $4,000 for the same period.

As times improve and tourist travel reaches its maximum we predict that our own Blue Licks Battlefield Park will rank near the top as a money-maker.

Eventually those who preferred a "line of smoke-stacks" in the preservation of scenic beauties and the establishment of State parks will realize, we think, that a better investment for Kentucky has been made by the establishment of a park system.

A Good Bill.

The Richmond Register calls attention to an excellent bill apparently lost "in the swirl of New Deal uncertainties" introduced by the Supreme Court's NRA decision.

The bill, introduced by Senators Gerald Nye and Bennett Clark outlaws three resolutions setting up enforcement against this country being drawn into another European war. These resolutions would bar all loans, public or private, to a foreign nation at war; bar to sail from American ports, would prohibit passports to Americans wishing to travel in war zones, and would provide that any shipment of munitions of war contraband from the United States would be made strictly at the buyer's risk.

This bill should be passed; and an amendment making it compulsory that the executive officers of any foreign country involved in war contraband to any foreign nation at war necessitate the shipment in person might be added. There would we take it, be comparatively little trouble, should such an amendment be adopted.

In any event it is certain that the American people are overwhelmingly opposed to our embroilment in any other foreign war and passage of the Nye-Clark bill will have quick universal approval.

A Valuable Man.

Joseph E. Robinson, editor of the Central Record, Lancaster, has announced as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Representative of this county.

Current history may count itself fortunate—and confident it does—that it is to be accorded an opportunity to vote for a man so eminently fitted to serve his State as Joe Robinson.

Mr. Robinson is an excellent lawyer and a successful farmer on an extensive scale. He is a former National Committeeman of his party, and has had large experience in State politics. He will, we feel sure, be given the nomination and be duly elected. He will make our only big county, but the State, a valuable man at Frankfort.

Is Society Safe For Pitts?

The name, "reformatory" is more than often a misnomer. In too many instances the convict is schooled through his association with hardened criminals older than he in the subjects of crime. He emerges from prison with the idea that society owes him a living, yet it how he will.

But it seems there are cases of true reformation of prisoners, who have served their terms, paid their debts to society and in such instances society has been made the opportunity to take their place in its ranks once more as useful citizens. Prison administrators have often been told that their job is to rehabilitate men convicted of crimes so they will be safe for society, says the Christian Science Monitor; the issue in this instance that of "Alabama" Pitts" appears to be whether society is safe for the rehabilitated man."

Edwin C. Pitts, convicted of robbery at 20, walked out of Sing Sing prison recently a free man. He was a star football and baseball player while in prison. Warden Lawes calls him "a man in every sense of the word." The Albany team in the International League offered Pitts a job upon his release, but Judge W. G. Bramham, president of the National Association of Minor Baseball Leagues, ruled that an ex-convict could not be admitted to organized baseball.

Here is a case in which a man has paid the price of his offense against society and society refuses—through Judge Bramham, at least—to release the notes he has thus paid, that is has held upon one man's freedom. The attitude is thoroughly unfair.

The Festival Of June.

The landscape was typical, the scenic rolling contour of the fields, the meandering "branch," glimpses of hospital in clumps of ash and oak and walnut the rich pattern of the ploughed fields all the more marked it as The Bluegrass. It was, too, one of those rare June mornings, warm, glorious and yet with a breeze that carried coolness and odorous as if "off a rain." Waffles, golden brown waffles for breakfast! and we sat down on the porch with smoking cigarette and be soothed by the beauties of a scene familiar, yet never to lose its charm. There is no regard grudged for the labor of hoe and one wonders if the appeal of its loveliness is not somehow linked with pleasant memories of childhood, of carefree days a-wing a winding "branch," of the incense of the meadows, the clatter of a mowing machine, the smell of grass newly cut, evening in windows; or the lonesome tinkle of a sheep bell at twilight, the plaintive call of bobwhite, the whistle of a erazing horse in the tall grass and plantain of the yard at nightfall, fragrance of lemon verbena and the dank yet sweet smell of Virginia Creeper about the old portico. Perhaps it is all this and because of these that we are this familiar landscape of the Bluegrass Region of Kentucky through the eyes of a lover. Yet the charm of its quiet beauty lies before one like a pastoral stone setting of exquisite craftsmanship. One feels but the need of an orchestra to complete the picture; and it is then that we realize that Nature is the perfect artist always, setting her stage so cunningly that she seems her will folk, her little feathered musicians, to song.

Clear, liquid, penetrating comes the canary-like trill of a song sparrow from the lilac bushes. Poor little singer! His rowdy cousin, the English sparrow has well-nigh crowded him from his home land. So far as we know he has been from every tree and hedgerow. The meadow lark sails, parrotlike-like to a fence stake, insome high flowering cover, into the air, to drift to us in plaintive sweetness. A quail whistles from a distant thicket, the woodpeckers drum industriously and a friendly robin expresses his satisfaction upon the finding of an earthworm. Other feathered musicians join the chorus, contributing their parts to the orchestral accompaniment of Nature's production of the Pageant of Summer, the Festival of June. To seldom we listen and few of us we think, realize the importance of these birds in making perfect that season of birds and life and beauty which is Summer. Without them, how sad the fields, how silent the trees, how imperfect the lovely pageant of Nature at her loveliest.

The "Clinging Vine."

What has become of the "clinging vine" type of woman? Been for ten years she has been predicting the fate of Kentucky since November, 1923. From State prisons of Kentucky since November, 1933. From Blue Grass of Kentucky since November, 1933. From Marrowbone received receipts of $4,556.64. Cumberland Falls, not yet accessible easily from the west, produced $1,38457 and Natural Bridge, $4,000 for the same period.

MR. LOWDEN VIEWS WITH ALARM

(Louisville Times)

Frank O. Lowden, addressing grass rooters who Mr. Hyde indicated, has not accepted in behalf of ex-Herbert Hoover, makes a deep-rooted speech in behalf of adherence to the Constitution, and declares himself against centralization of government.

It was expected that Mr. Lowden would speak well of the Constitution, and up for States' rights. It was thought possible that he might also say something else. The country at the time seemed to call for something more than a declaration of loyalty to the Constitution. And an announcement of the debut of the G. O. P. as a States' rights party. Some people may have been surprised at Mr. Lowden's unrealistic conception of government; at his declaration that there are only two forms of government, the autocratic and the democratic; that the Soviet regime in Russia, the Nazi regime in Germany and the Fascist government in Italy are all George III were as like as three peas.

It was inevitable that as a result of the separatist movement which history calls the American Revolution school children would think of the Kings of Great Britain as a dropsical and of the Declaration of Independence as the initial gesture against despotism.

But it will be hard for some grown people to forget Mazzini, Cavour and the Italian people may not even know George III. As monarch whose military ambition was a big—prior to his accession to the throne—seemed to be the loss of the thirteen colonies, it may be hard for people who know a king was hardly to be always an ass.

George, the home-loving sedate husband, the hair-splitter, the pedantic, the man who quarrelled with Pitt, Lenin, Stalin, counterpart of Hitler, Mussolini, Mussolini, Hitler, Lenin, Stalin, Pitt and Pitt and Parliament and Whig assertiveness as Soviet Russia and Nazi Germany!

THE FARMER'S OPPORTUNITY

(Big Sandy News-Recorder)

The farmers have had very unfavorable weather this spring and that should have been planted earlier are not yet in the ground.

This is a year that will test the farmers. Those who measure up to the task will be overcoming the handicaps will win prizes worth fighting for. Those who take it easy will have it hard next winter and next year.

The markets for farm products, including all kinds of livestock are higher than for many years. Only the farmers who raise something to sell will profit by the situation. The ones who quit because there has been no market will lose a great opportunity. Those who double their efforts instead of let the bolors of a silver lined cloud and consult the county agent, will have an abundance of products to sell and will be happy for having a row to hoe against odds. There is yet time to plant and grow certain things, which may be different from the routine crops heretofore raised, or perhaps from the rut in which many have travelled for years, but this may be the time for the future.

The experience of last year on the part of those who did not put forth unusual efforts to produce a surplus for market should stimulate them to extra efforts this year.

Men who are getting some relief money should not depend upon this small stipend for next winter. These men on farms are having the lot of garden land should by all means work every possible inch of ground. This does not interfere with relief work and the men who do this will get credit for doing all they can to support themselves. Women doing this have are criticized very freely by their neighbors.

GRASS ROOTERS' PLATFORM MOST DESIRABLE AND INTERESTING

(Louisville Times)

The grass rooters' platform is most decidedly interesting.

It is designed to create in the minds of home boys and girls the impression that they might support Republican ticket if they made their demand that they be paid in cash what the country does now owe them. But nobody is committed to anything.

The grass rooters ask for "sound money." Any party could honestly do that.

They demand that child labor be outlawed in made, by the political element which has kept it legal, that the Supreme Court be made unconstitutional the code provisions which child labor temporarily, while the Roosevelt Administration was advocating a Federal Child Labor Amendment.

The grass rooters approve "the principle of" collective bargaining. The Roosevelt Administration heartily approves collective bargaining.

The grass rooters demand that the party of centralization, the party of the party it represents and slants for States' rights.

The grass rooters could not small and had to indorse "economic adjustment" that the Administration favors.

They approve of Mr. Lowden's demand for subsidy for farmers, while the protective tariff continues.

The Administration has given farmers the benefit of the processing taxes.

"National security must start on the farm," the grass rooters say. It has done so. The present Administration's measures have been its starter.

Low rates of interest on farm loans are appreciated. The Administration has lowered farm loan rates.

Unable to avoid it and face the grass roots region, the grass roots are, after their thundering indictment of the Roosevelt Administration, adopted a platform which, at most points, supports what that Administration has done.

KENTUCKY—VACATION LAND

(Lexington Herald)

America offers a great variety of attractions to those planning vacations with the many national parks in the West and the sungrounds in the East, but Kentucky, "in the middle of the map—and where she ought to be" offers within her own borders all of the vacation attractions that the nation itself is used for, and then holds up as the place of resistance of "copyrighted" fame for hospitality in the old Kentucky home that all people entertain a desire to visit and see the Blue Grass state.

In accordance with its annual custom, The Herald today publishes its Vacation Edition, setting forth the wealth of attractions to be found in Kentucky from the Pine Mountain range to the Big Sandy to the lowlands of the Mississippi. Particularly are the scenes of Central Kentucky—the Blue Grass—featured in picture and story, as within this small area there are to be found entirely-five of the one hundred major points of interest in all Kentucky.

And variety! There are the lure of the Blue Grass, the mountains with the charm of the old Colonial home, the majesty of the Appalachians, the mawestness of the Pallasades, the placidity of the lakes and the romantic beauty of the caverns, the rushing of the rivers and the roar of the falls, the solemnity of the shrines and the outdoor thrill of the parks.

For week end and vacation trips, Kentucky has no rival. Located within a hundred miles of the center of population of all States, on the trunk highways of the nation, North and South and East and West, and just south of that imaginary Mason and Dixon line" which borders upon two-thirds of the motoring population of the country, it is the most convenient place to set to and the most accessible after one gets there.

Instead of having to devote a week-end or vacation trip to seeing one thing a lake or a cavern, a river or a mountain, the visitor in Kentucky may breeze past the panoramic park of Blue Grass estates one hour and just ease enthralled the next at the rugged picture of gorge and stream. He may be in the center of Kentucky Horseland in one hour and in the heart of Kentucky Motorland the next.

But wherever the visitor goes he will unfailingly find hospitality, and in the Blue Grass region will be introduced to delectable Kentucky fried chicken, cooked as only Kentucky mammies and mothers know how, and mint julep—and that's worth going miles to enjoy.

FILLED VALLEYS OF THE WESTERN COAL FIELD

A rather unique land form is represented by the filled valleys of the Western Coal Field, the region centering around the cities of Owensboro, Henderson, Madisonville, etc. Here the valleys of the Green River and its tributaries, and the various streams emptying into the Ohio River, are broad and flat bottomed. The flat bottoms though are not the usual flood plains produced by all streams as they grow old and more sluggish as dissipated by the lower Mississippi. They are bottoms made of a deep fill of alluvium. They are large valleys, which subsequent to their cutting, have been filled to a great depth by—mud, sand and gravel, burying the bases of the surrounding hills. The streams are now cutting again down through this fill. The large flats, of course, are of considerable agricultural value. The intriguing question is, Why after carving out deep valleys did these streams begin to fill them up again? Looking around other parts of the country one can find a suggestively similar condition in the Atlantic coast where due to recent sinking, the lower ends of the river valleys are now flooded by ocean waters. Chesapeake Bay is such a drowned valley the lower course of the Potomac River now flooded with ocean waters. These rivers are now at aggrading their load of sediment on out the coast, the rivers are now depositing their detritus into the submerg-Valleys.

ed portion of their valleys. This suggests that a general sinking of western Kentucky within rather recent time may have produced a stagnation of river waters there, with resulting filling with alluvium. On this supposition, land might started the rivers cutting again. However, all evidence points in another direction.

These filled valleys are the result of events of the glacial period. At first one is inclined to interpret them as a result of glacial damming by the southward spread of great ice sheets of that time. And that did happen to many streams. Such damming would have created the lower courses of these streams into lakes into which the breakaters would have deposited it. A somewhat simpler situation seems to have been the case.

With the margin of a great ice sheet not far to the north, melting of ice produced floods. These occurred on a grand scale in the warmer months and particularly when with returning warmer climate the last of the ice sheets was melted back to the north. Excessive flood times resulted in backwater far up all tributary streams to the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, streams fed by glacial melting were overloaded with rock debris, mud, sand and gravel, released by the melting ice. Much of this was deposited in the backwaters, filling the valleys to great depth. These streams are still cutting again digging out their

JOHN L. CUMMINS

John L. Cummins, Harrison county auctioneer, made formal announcement last week of candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Senator of the Thirteenth district, composed of Harrison, Nicholas, Pendleton and Robertson counties, to fill the unexpired term of Senator Frank Lebus, who resigned under pressure to become the Highway Commission.

Mr. Cummins is well known throughout central Kentucky as an auctioneer, having been identified with a number of large sales. During the tobacco season he has conducted with the Cynthiana Live Stock and Tobacco Sales Company, one of the largest auction houses in Monday. He auctions on tobacco floors in the south and at Maysville. Since coming to his majority he has been taking an active part in local politics and for four years has been, and is now, president of the Harrison County Young Men's Democratic Club which has disbanded and added hundred of new members under his guidance, and aided the party materially in polls in regular elections. He has never sought nor held public office, either elective or appointive.

Mr. Cummins is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Cummins, and when following his election, is a bonafide dirt farmer; he knows the needs of agriculture, and sympathizes with this class. He attended Cynthiana high school, and the commercial department of the Cynthiana Business Men's Club.

Mr. Cummins has received much encouragement to his candidacy, not only among his friends in Harrison county, but also in the other three counties affected. As the campaign progresses, he will have future statements to make to the public.

FORGOTTEN BANK DEPOSITS

In almost every bank of any size there are dead deposits, sums of money of various size apparently forgotten by those who originally left them with the bank.

Recently, a New York bank launched a campaign to wipe out dormant accounts. To do so it was considerable trouble trying to trace owners of money which has not been noticed for twenty years or longer. Some one thousand dollars his old pass book showing a balance of $173 but when interest was added he received a check for $235.

Almost every bank which has gone into liquidation has found deposit accounts to the credit of people whose address and whereabouts noboody cared to know. Many of these accounts are small but the fact that they have been in existence for some time shows how careless and forgetful many people are in their financial transactions.

UNEMPLOYMENT

(Woodford Sun)

People who are fortitionally telling us that we will have to count in very great permanent unemployment seem to think that we have some big generation standstill that all the inventions have been made, that everything that is needed to the comfort of human life has come into being and that nothing can be just go round and round, like squirrel in a cage.

Think of the great sufferers men who are employed, directly and indirectly, as a result of the invention of the automobile. What would those men have done if the automobile had not been discovered, Yes, but it was.

The only thing which can prevent fresh inventions is the attitude of those who will every now and then take up the slack in labor, will be instating to those dumb people who think that cutting hours of labor down will create employment and passing laws which will destroy the reward for individual initiative, will be the only road to prosperity.

S. E. Alexander, former ton city commissioner, was indicted by the federal grand jury at Lexington Thursday on a charge of making and presenting a false claim against the government in connection with work of a group of relief laborers on a CWA project.
