75,000,000 In Projects For Relief Submitted

Projects approximating $75,000,000 will have been submitted to Washington for approval by September 12, the previously announced deadline, by the Kentucky Works Progress Administration, George H. Goodman, administrator, said Wednesday. In all there will be about 2,500 projects.

It is expected, Mr. Goodman said, these projects will more than care for 46,613 workable men for a period of one year. Out of a total of 96,252 workable men in the state the CCC Camps, PWA, the State Highway Department and other Federal agencies are expected to absorb 49,639 men. This number is the difference between the total number and those to be handled on Works Progress Administration projects.

Mr. Goodman expressed gratification at the manner in which projects had been fired by local governmental units and the cooperation evidenced by governmental officials.

These projects, Mr. Goodman said, will get under way just as rapidly as they are approved by Washington. He expects little time to be lost in the process of approval and hopes to have every workable man in the state earning a security wage within a period of from thirty days to six weeks. Already a number of approved projects are under way in different sections of the state. More will be started daily, Mr. Goodman said, until the entire program is in full swing, which will be in short order.

SENATOR HUEY LONG IS ASSASSINATED IN LOUISIANA CAPITAL

"Kingfish" Dies From Bullet Wounds Inflicted By Young Surgeon

HIS ASSASSIN IS KILLED

United States Senator Huey P. Long, stormy petrel of Louisiana politics, and self-styled "kingfish" and "dictator" of that state, was fatally wounded Sunday night when he was shot in the stomach by a man who was riddled with bullets and killed by bodyguards.

Long had just left the House of Representatives chamber in the capitol at Baton Rouge, where he was directing some bills for passage at the special session of the legislature which met Monday. As he was walking along the corridor near the Governor's office, Dr. Carl A. Weiss, Jr., 30-year-old eye, ear, nose and throat specialist of Baton Rouge, stepped from behind a pillar and fired one shot at Senator Long before he was riddled with bullets from sub-machine guns held by his guards. The assassin, dressed in an immaculate white doctor's coat, was dying on the floor. He was a graduate of Tulane University and a son of a former president of the Louisiana State Medical Association.

No motive was known for the shooting. While Dr. Weiss was known to have been a bitterly hostile critic, he was mild mannered. Dr. Weiss was married and the father of a three-year-old baby. The only known motive for the shooting was a bill which Senator Long was sponsoring that would have destroyed the political fortunes of his father-in-law of Dr. Weiss, a circuit court judge. Senator Long had frequently expressed fear of assassination. He was closely guarded at all times.

Louisiana railroad commissioner 1918-21.

Louisiana public service commissioner 1921-26.

Governor of Louisiana 1928-31.

Defeats effort to impeach him, winning out in a bitter struggle.

Retains governorship as "dictator" to prevent foes from controlling government.

Takes seat next January 25, 1932 as senator.

Poultry Profits Higher This Year

Owners of good poultry are making more money this year than in several years, according to records kept at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. This is especially true of purebred poultry flock owners, who reported an average net profit of 21.2 cents per bird for the first of this year, compared to 6.2 cents in the same month last year. Profits ranged from 19.3 cents in 1932 and 18.5 cents in 1932.

Demonstration flock owners cooperate with county agents of the College of Agriculture and the Kentucky Poultry Improvement Association in teaching the value of good chickens, feed and care for according to the best known methods. There are 39 such flocks in Kentucky.

The college and the association are planning to construct a new flock of Rhode Island Reds of Kentucky, a national poultry improvement plan. Flock owners and hatcheries meeting high standards will be protected against substandard competition, and purchasers will be able to buy with confidence.

CONFETTI streamers wound their way across a crowded dance floor, but there was no confetti on the man in gray. He lazed across along the deck, surveying those who crowded at the rail.

A pair of deep blasts from the liner's whistle, and there came the stagbang: "All ashore! Last call!" Late passengers hurried up the gangplank. Visitors trotted down. Upon it all the man in gray bent a concave and still roving and somewhat furtive eye.

Ten minutes later the gangplank was prow about and steaming down from the channel. Slowly the man in gray ascended to the boat deck, in a leisurely and aimless manner, it seemed.

He sauntered around the end of a site boat and almost stumbled over her. Down against the rail she sat, a hundred, hatless figure in a tan sports coat. She looked up with pained lips and startled eyes. The man in gray stopped quickly.

"Sorry," he said. "I must have been staring at something I guess."

"Oh, it's—it's all right. I don't blame you for not expecting to find anyone here."

"Then it's a mask?" he suggested, proffering the pack.

"Thanks." She plucked one and held it up to the lighted match. Then suddenly she gasped a little and said:

"Please—I've got to tell you something—I can't keep on like this. Maybe you'll think I'm a fool, but—"

As he gazed at her quizzically, she blurted out the whole story.

"Let's stand back here," she begged. "I don't want anyone to see me. I was mad married. Dr. Weiss was married and the father of a three-year-old baby. The only known motive for the shooting was a bill which Senator Long was sponsoring that would have destroyed the political fortunes of the father-in-law of Dr. Weiss, a circuit court judge. "I'm a stenographer in the insurance business. I'm not bad looking, my name and address and next kin are back home for a week. There were some diamond rings and one diamond, the size of three velvet trees. I'm sick of it. I'm tired half of them were empty, and all of a sudden I began thinking how easy it would be to grab one or two rings.

"I'm not drunk, but it happened I guess that's the reason I acted like such a fool—and I'd just had the idea of stealing. I meant. Anyhow, the first thing I knew I was down on deck, just me and stationed up that pair of rings and that big diamond, and I screamed and resisted. Then I felt sorry for the poor fool I'd run out."

No longer was the man at her side gazing at her.

"You!" he gasped, wide eyes upon her pale face.

"Yes, I know," she hurried on; "there was a lot of sensible about it. But somehow I felt guilty and terribly sorry, and so I did it. And then I didn't dare go back. I was sure they'd find I was an accomplice. I rushed across the street and jumped into a taxi and told the driver to get away from there as fast as he could.

"I'm sick of it, I'm tired of being good. I'm sick of being a fool. I'm tired of being a fool for a five-dollar ride and being sorry for a two-bit
