THE VICTIMS OF MORPHINE.

What a Fearful Story About Scrooge Toward a Cure.

The habitual use of opium and its derivative, morphine, is assuming vast proportions. It will suffice here to record the victims of this baleful amount to some hundreds of thousands. Dr. Scrooge's Purifying Salt, of New Orleans, reduces the number of victims the world over at fourteen thousand.

Those predisposed to contract the pain-killer habit, by reason of hereditary constitution, suffering temporarily from exposure, pain, or nervous prostration, or distressed by long watching or by severe labor, will find in Scrooge's Purifying Salt the required relief. Soon becomes a staunch friend. The dose is progressively increased to insure the full effect. Soon the patient finds himself with it, or even in getting increasingly independent of it, in a degree of physical and mental depression which seems unbearable. The sufferer loses all self-control, and is the victim of the habit for life.

The physician is not seldom to blame for the formation of this habit in his patients. Says Professor Ball, in giving instructions on the proper use of Scrooge's Purifying Salt: "Any morphine to the amount prescribed by the physician beyond endurance, is to the victim of Scrooge's Purifying Salt as food to famine."
