Little of the Breathitt court dismissed charges filed against Mrs. Mattie Deers Hadden, Jack Gabbard and William Wickline in connection with the court room shooting of Judge Shepherd. All witnesses at the trial were searched. Mrs. Wickline, who came from her chair in the courtroom and shot Judge Shepherd to death, was removed to the Knott county jail at Hindman for safekeeping. Shepherd was charged with slaying the woman's 17-year-old son at Jackson on Christmas eve.

Mrs. Wickline expressed no regret over slaying Shepherd, but said she was sorry she wounded the two bystanders, who were shot accidentally when the woman fired four times at Shepherd.

MOTORING TAX HIGH

It costs five cents a mile to operate the average privately owned automobile in the United States, according to the Chamber of Commerce in a painstaking survey covering many states and many makes of automobiles.

Depreciation, of course, is the biggest charge, amounting for two cents every time a mile is travelled. Maintenance is the next largest charge, representing one cent a mile, and the cost of gasoline minus the tax, represents nearly another cent for each mile travelled.

The greatest surprise in the operating cost of automobiles, however, is to be found, in the tax charge. Taxes amount to one cent but every time you drive your automobile a mile it costs you half a cent, or half as much as it costs miles to be exact. And this goes for every mile.

Figured by the mile, this may not seem high, but if you stop to suppose you drive your car 10,000 miles a year. This means you will spend about $100 taxes for the privilege of using your car. Not this. It amounts to better than a ten per cent tax on the cost of operating an automobile.

ABOUT OLD HAM

(Lexington Herald)

William Lyne Wiatt, Jr., graduate of the University of Kentucky and author of the "Line o' Type" Lexington Herald's editorial staff, is the author of the column, "Line o' Type or Two," in the Louisville Courier-Journal, a modestly named but quite worth a greater newspaper. The Line o' Type column was conceived by Bert Lee Taylor, who made the initials "B. L. T." a nationally known one of the most celebrated newspaper columns in America and has gone through with it this is a bet, it will be at the end of a year.

Mr. Shinnick formerly edited Georgetown's weekly paper, the Kentucky Kernel. As has been mentioned before he likes to write about things to eat.

The purpose of this editorial was, originally, to refer to what The Herald said editorially Sunday about old Kentucky ham. Among the items in The Line o' Type for 1936, published by the Tribune, follows:

OF AMBROSIAL DELIGHT

"We write again of ailments, and they are ever grieving. Just one about which our affections are ever ready to rejoice. Just to think of it brings us nigh unto the frenzy that moved Lord Byron to declare that the pig 'Of all the delicacies in this mundane sphere' Stands, that matter of fact, to be the most delicate.' Good enough, but Lamb! Ate you never of those lambrosial old hams? Ate you ever sojourn in a Homeseat where they made them?

"Slow and loving was the process. You salted your hams in the spring time; you hung them for days and weeks on end in the fragrant smoke of corncobs and hickory wood; then you left them to one not for a week or a month, but for a year and a half, two years, even thirty months. Then, at last God's slow but divine time conspired for perfection, and you took the number of old and boiled and baked your treasure, there could be no doubt even that it was the highest topmost peak in the tall mountains of delight.

"Your social standing in Homeseat town varied in bygone days with the size and weight of your family. You would as soon have stuck a lick of salt in your eye as to have dared serve him a generous slice with less than a half dozen eggs. Mother and you would have spent the week before the Sabbath in the pokerbook or the cookbook, or both.

"The courage Lorenzo of New Orleans, the onion soup of Quincy, the pressed duck of Paris—all good enough in their way and in their place, but place! On our plate with a slice of twoyear-old ham. And you, brethren and sisters, what will you have?"

By the way, we wonder if Bill Shinnick remembers the play he wrote, "How the Ham Saved the Homestead," with which the Strollers went homestoming. That was a very worthy effort. Old Kentucky may say, "I care not who eats the hams of the Nation so long as I produce them."

NO LONGER HERETICAL

(Richmond Register)

Only recently President Edward Charles Elliott of Purdue University said he gathered of officials of New York State colleges that American colleges must abandon their objective of higher education for all persons." Inasmuch as it is only a conjecture we have to note that the cry was for a college education for everybody. We think it thinks he wants it, the sort of thing that President Elliott said seemed almost heretical.

But even college authorities learn from experience. Many years of experience have convinced many educational leaders that the period spent at college is a period of waste for many. What has come to be realized out of the expansion of college training is that the university is not equally beneficial only to those who have a definite and serious purpose; those who are glad to concentrate on the work of study and who look upon the fun of campus parties as an incidental. Out of the experience, too, has come the knowledge that not every young person who thinks he wants college training is qualified to profit by it. Perhaps that is what President Elliott had in mind when he spoke of the necessity of "development of the ability of American democracy is to lead the world."

It is just as well that education-ists have come to the conclusion that the university is not equally to many it also offers more than many are able to take.

PORTRAIT

Now might has come—her busy hands, at rest
From all their loving toil, are the more
Save when a small, adoring face is blessed
With briefly tender touch on cheek or brow.
Around her chair they gather, one and all
Clamoring gaily for a favored place,
Till eagerness too manifestly brawl
Is shamed to stillness by her smiling face
Listens to the talk of school and play—
Question, approves or smiles at some small jest;
Counsels or scolds, rejoices, or with Eay
Rejoinder, adds her laughter to the rest.
Then, with mocking gesture as at flies,
She shoos away each little noisy chap
And—tenderest compassion in her eyes—
Lifts the complaining kitten to her lap.
