Describes Making Farm Reservoirs

Wide-spread interest in earth dam reservoirs as a source of water supply for farm livestock has brought from the College of Agriculture of the University of Kentucky Circular No. 317, called "Earth Dams and Farm Reservoirs."

Water is a problem on many Kentucky farms, especially in dry years when creeks and springs go dry. One solution, according to this circular, is a reservoir, properly located, well built and maintained. On many farms good reservoirs can be had with no outlay other than for labor.

The circular discusses various types of reservoirs, why some of them fail, how to select the site for a reservoir, how to make the survey for the dam, and finally how to construct the dam so it will stay and hold sufficient water for the livestock of the farm. Fall is a good time of year to provide for a better water supply. Ask a county agent or write to the College of Agriculture for a copy of this circular.

Name Fire Is Old

Eire, the name of Ireland, was applied to the Emerald isle 2,000 years ago. It is pronounced "Air-a". With the accent on the "air." Ireland is not quite as large as the state of Maine. Its greatest length is 306 miles. The island's outline is an irregular oval, not unlike the knotty potato which has been christened "Irish." The potato has been Ireland's adopted child, since Walter Raleigh, then a young English governor, experimented with American plants in his garden at Youghal, County Cork, where the first potatoes were grown in Ireland.

Storage Tank Is Seen In Early Apple Crop

The Kentucky apple crop matured early, and so were into storage considerably ahead of the usual date, which fact adds to the storage problem, according to W. Magill, extension fruit specialist for the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

With proper storage, Magill says the earliest to Yates, Rome Beauty, Winesap and Stayman can be kept in good condition until February or March, but most other varieties also can be preserved several months.

However, it is necessary to store fruit rather low temperatures if it is to keep well. Apples will keep as much as 24 hours at a temperature of 85 to 90 degrees if they will in two hours at a temperature of 40 degrees, Magill says.

Most storage houses and cellars can be adapted out of fruit by nailing up the doors. They should be closed tight through the day, the commercial apple growers find that it pays to use several fans to cool their packed storehouses during the course of the early fall.

Fall Is Best Time To Fertilize Lawns

Experimental evidence as well as experience indicate that fall is the best time to feed bluegrass that is fertilize the lawn.

N. R. Elliott, landscape specialist of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, recommends the use of a complete fertilizer or tobacco stalks. The commercial fertilizer to apply is 10-10-10 at the rate of 20 lbs. to a plot. It should be broadcast over the lawn and then raked in. Tobacco stalks are effective when used grass. For the average lawn, Elliott says, 100 pounds of a complete fertilizer is the fall with tobacco stalks, benefit the grass, says Mr. Elliott.

Where tobacco stalks or stems are used, they should be applied as soon as they can be secured, says Elliott. Until March 1 or 15 Tobacco stems should be as distributed that the grass will not be smothered by them.

Mr. Elliott points out that bluegrass is a cool season grass, that it grows best in fall winter and spring. Therefore fertilizer applied in the spring does not do the fall and before they come in late spring and early summer it must beneficial to the lawn.
