SOCIAL and SOCIETY

THE SERMON

Dedicated to Mrs. F. J. Hardesty, Carlisle, Ky.

The sermon was most eloquent
Though not a word was said,
No text, no theme, no argument;
Yet, hungry souls were fed.

No doctrine, creed, sectarian,
No ritual, no gown;
She was the gospel clarion
But now she wears a crown.

I saw her tears and kindly smile,
Her patience all the day,
Though bearing cruel pain the while,
I heard her sing and pray.

Her mien was meek, serene and mild,
Wide open was her purse,
A godsend to the orphaned child
I saw her hand disburse.

The poor, the blind, the sinner knelt
To praise her God and her,
Wherever human need was felt,
Her interest centered there.

I sometime sleep while preaching drones
And seldom do I weep,
Forget much that they teach, but impressions are not deep.

But when I saw that Christian life
Along the path I trod—
Man sin and selfishness and strife
It lifted me to God.

And now she sleeps her long last sleep
Upon a quiet hill,
While you and I in anguish weep
Her life is preaching still.
