WHAT'S HAPPENED? In Europe

by Dr. Charles M. Knapp
UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY

Reports from the French front all week have told of somewhat impressed activity by patrols of both sides operating in no-man's-land between the Maginot and Sigfried lines. Their objective has been the discovery of activity which would indicate troop concentrations behind the lines for the long awaited offensive. Essentially the front has been almost as quiet as all the pre-ending weeks.

Monday the British envoys disclosed that 30,000 Anzac troops, Australians and New Zealand volunteers, had been conveyed safely throughout their long voyage and landed at Suez. This has been interpreted as supporting other information which has indicated that the British and French have been making expensive preparations to meet an eventuality that may arise in the near east. Turkish spokesmen have admitted that Turkey is no neutral but only non-belligerent for the moment." These Anzacs constitute but a small part of the forces concentrated since the outbreak of the war in the Mediterranean area. The French have sent troops to Algiers, Tunis and Syria, the British have sent troops to Egypt, Palestine and Syria. Troops will be available should Russia attempt to drive southward toward the important Iraq oil fields, or should Turkey, France and Britain determine to drive northward toward the Russian oil fields in the Caucasus, or should Russia attempt to invade Roumania and the Balkans seeking to gain control of the Roumanian oil fields. From the Roumanian oil fields near Ploesti, the Caspian Sea and the Roumanian fields both Germany and Russia must depend for oil supplies. Both the United States and Venezuela, Germany's two chief sources for oil, are neutral. Germany is obtaining a great deal of her imported oil. Much of this amount Germany must import annually from one or the other of those sources. European fears that a war waged with Germany's equipment will be won or lost probably by the belligerent controlling oil supplies.

Rumors from Rome have come claims and counter-claims that after eighteen days of the most strenuous attacks on the Karelian Isthmus in front of the village of Summa, Russia's Finland's second largest city, the Russians succeeded in attempting to smashed through the outer defenses of the Mannerheim line. The Finns have claimed that as yet they are not in danger on this front except from military service. In much each they appealed directly to Sweden for aid and intervention warning that otherwise they would have ultimately to agree to a peace settlement which would be dangerous to Sweden's safety. To Englands and France dispatched representatives seeking aid and direct British and French military troops. That some preparations are being made by Britain and France is indicated, but the tight censorship has succeeded in concealing its nature. Germany would very quickly join Attmark, with some three hundred Germans, there were 6 German ships captured and sunk by the Graf Spee off the coast of the Norwegian waters. There, upon Mitred orders from the British Admiralty, British destroyers boarded the Attmark aground and boarded the German prisoners of war and liberated the prisoners after hand-to-hand fighting. The prize was landed Sunday in Scotland. Norway has protested against the raid as a war of protests between Norway, Germany, and England. The Nazis have reprised by bombing Britain for an act of "piracy, must." Some confusion has arisen. Norway protested Norway's failure to prevent the violation of her neutrality by German naval vessels. The protest may be the direct result of Germany's protest against the violation of the other.

Johnson Seeks $70,000 Fund To Advertise

Plans for raising money to advertise Kentucky's tourist attractions, which the authors believe would help us more industries and other investments into the state, are being worked out in conferences between Governor Johnson and his Administration leaders in Frankfort.

The move was explained by Representative John M. Hunnicut of Ludlow as the "first step in preparing for celebration of Kentucky's sesquicentennial in 1942."

Hunnicut and Representative John S. Justt of Williamstown have been collaborating on the plans. The former said they expected to submit them this week for final approval of other administration officials.

The final idea, Hunnicut said, is to raise an additional $70,000 a year to advertise the state.

"The publicity division of the Department of Conservation has been handling $20,000 a year," Hunnicut said, "and that is not anything like enough to take advantage of Kentucky's opportunities. We need at least that much to do with that is to get out the quarterly Kentucky Magazine.

"We are working on a series of bills to put the cost of the advertising on those who would benefit most by it and expect to introduce them soon. We believe the money they would be called upon to pay would be an investment in their own business.

"We expect to offer a joint resolution authorizing the Governor to appoint an advisory commission of twenty-five to direct progressional district. The commission would very willingly convene travel expenses in advising the Governor and staff, so that we can easily find nine persons able and willing to do this for the state.

"Expenditure of the advertising fund would be under the direction of the publicity director, for which there is no need for ads and magazine advertising, road maps and other ways of reaching the public.

SOIL CONSERVATION

(Lancaster Central Records)

The public has long demanded legislation looking toward soil conservation. A bill is now pending in Frankfort providing for intervention of the state in the affairs of farmers in the prevention of the washing of soil from the farms, and ruination in production. Like most reform measures, it has its critics. There has been an unusual amount of false propaganda and misrepresentation in the discussion of legislation unpopular. With the soil conservation bill a law, it provides Kentucky from the national treasury a contribution of about $2,500,000 annually, in addition to the present stipend given the state of Lecking river. This money has been and is being appropriated by Congress and Kentucky has already contributed its part. It would give Kentucky farmers a total of from between 17 and 23 years of benefit from past payments, and six months of training in C. C. C. camps in addition to some practical training in individual contribution to the cause. Kentucky farmers have lost millions of dollars by the washing of soil and fertilizer and wasting of soil and fertilizer. Terracing and other improvements will make the ball game to be played without a 90 per cent vote of the state. New ideas are not popular, but a majority of the landowners in the district will be found to be owners of farmers may organize districts. Not a single penny of the money is to be spent without a 90 per cent vote of the state. Nothing can be done in a district that could be arranged is provided for. The legislation is to prevent any inconvenience or harm to any landowner. Thirty-four states have adopted similar legislation and the idea of this proposed and acreage is already in districts. There are about 900 land owners and there has not been a single person with objections and objections noted. In fact, should the bill become a law there would be more voluntary applicants for the service of the P.W.A. and the C.C.C. work than they have appropriated fund could possibly meet in several years to come. And in the event any harmful effects should appear which is the highest able possibility, the legislature would repeal the law before any great injury could be done to any body. It was first reported that the Extension Department of the University of Kentucky was opposing the bill, but all objections from and the opposition at this time be imported more from desire on the part of the opposing agencies to disapprove the law than any real opposition to its provisions.

But It's True

The eels live in lagoons and are virtually raised by people who occupy shacks alone the shore. The people have fed them rabbit meat for so long that the eels will touch nothing else. They gather every morning and evening to be fed. When they have reached a fat enough size they are caught and killed.

On July 27, 1934, Miss Harriet Chisholm drove off the first tee at the Arlington Country club in Virginia. Her ball went straight down the fairway, like most part of the brim of a man's hat, stopped, kicked, rolled around, but did not kick the hat off. The man, Robert Inchcliffe, was unhurt.
