FROM OVER THE LINE

(By J. W. Rogers)

News last week of the death of Mr. Firman B. Henry, Carlisle, impressed us tenderly, notwithstanding our life experiences had not touched often.

We vividly recall a rural school closing entertainment program held in Concord church not far from Carlisle in 1876 while we were attending the old Kentucky Normal School there. The outstanding number on that program was the valedictory address by Firman B. Henry, a brilliant young man who had been selected for that task on account of special ability to "act well his part." "There honor lies." It was the first valedictory we had ever heard and we shall never forget it. His enunciations on that occasion linger, but space bars us from repeating many of them.

In the beginning, "We're pleased to see before us such a crowd of visitors of whom we were proud," etc.

In the closing, To the audience, "Hoping we have not worried you, we bid you all a warm and friendly adieu." To the teachers, "To you let me express our thanks for all your care and unwearieness." To the student body, "Oh, let us perform well each task which is given 'til our time of probation is ended by Heaven."

Kind words can never die. Good words and deeds of men live after they are gone.

"Words fitly spoken are like apples of silver in pictures of gold."

WHAT'S HAPPENED IN EUROPE

By Dr. Charles M. Knapp, professor of History, University of Kentucky

The news of the week from Europe has centered about the Anglo-French withdrawal from central Norway and the critical situation which apparently was, and perhaps is, developing in the Mediterranean. The fact in Norway is that the continuance of the war there must for some time far to the north within the Arctic at least be confined to those areas Circle. Tonight (Sunday) it would seem that the allied forces during the past week abandoned their advanced positions in the interior east and south of Trondheim, against which they were operating from Andalanes and Namsos respectively. Then, in the face of overwhelming numbers of bombing planes, they withdrew to those ports on Friday and Saturday, and embarked the troops upon transports and sailed away. Whether they have been landed again in Norway is not clear, the attack on the German forces still holding the port of Narvik has not been disclosed. There has been, however that the allies will abandon that campaign too. Rather, the report is that they will have to take and hold that port, and then, if necessary, in order to control completely the shipment of iron ore from Narvik, to make threaten if necessary, the Swedish iron ore fields and the mining area in Carlisle on the I.

The reasons given for the failure of the allies in central Norway are varied. Primary importance is given to the fact that the Germans at the outset, by surprise, succeeded in getting all their troops, or forces into their hands. Thus, they were able to hold of the air at the very beginning of the war. Nor was Norway at least until the allies should be able to bring up an air force sufficient to hold satisfactory new ones. Nevertheless, in Norway, British fighter planes were able to oppose German bombers from the Shetland Islands, or from North Sea. Again with bases in Norway the German bombers did not need much help from two fighter planes, because of the short distances involved and the fact that the enemy fighter planes, the allied ones, could not, at first, fly beyond their bases. Nevertheless, the Germans, by the use of their superior numbers, did succeed in getting a good deal of support, mechanized artillery and tanks, ashore, and the failure of the allies to provide equipment and airplane support to the ground troops has been explained by Lloyd George, the Minister of Munitions, as due to the Italian threat, and the Italian threat, in turn, to Mussolini's demand for foreign supplies, which, if not reached, his propaganda, that nation would be the victim of a "war of Commerce." It is almost certain that the allies will not be overcome by the Germans in Norway. Nevertheless it is certain that the Germans will be able to dominate the Aegean Sea and the Adriatic, and Greece and Albania, and Yugoslavia, and Bulgaria, and Rumania, and Hungary, and Italy, and Spain, and Portugal, and Switzerland, and Belgium or Holland, and Italian troops, Spain guarding the land side of the Gibraltar fortifications, and Italy, if she should, as she felt compelled to have units of her navy and air force, operations in Norway, to the eastern Mediterranean, where the military authorities are asserting that the Germans are not much to gain in Norway beyond some control of Narvik and its ore docks, and that they have sent a force, or be led off into a diversion of their forces from the main points of the German attack.

Nevertheless, it is certain that the allies have lost prestige and morale and other threatened neutrals, which it will be difficult to regain.

—TO THE PUBLIC—

As you know we had the misfortune of having a fire that almost put us out of business as it ruined all of our equipment. We have gone to a big expense to make the LYRIC THEATRE as we say, "The Best Show In Town" and we now say as good as any theatre according to the size of our city. We have put in new booth, equipment and NEW SOUND and the best chairs on the market. Have repainted and decorated, and the walls and ceiling have been treated with Masonite Acoustical Board. We are trying to make the theatre as comfortable and inviting as possible. We want to satisfy our patrons and hope you will appreciate the effort and expense we have gone to and will stick by us in the future as you have in the past. There will be no change in price 10, 15 and 25c. We hope Come and see how you like the Old Lyric in its new dress. Please take notice that all children MUST SIT IN THE NO SMOKING IS THIS THEATRE. Will until you are outside to light your cigarettes. Many thanks.

Social and Society

LONELY THINGS

(Marcia Lewis Lecah)

Somehow, I love old things, forsaken sad,
Like bent old women clutching at shawls;
Stark skeletons of battleships in East mast, uplifted to the silent dock,
sky
As lonely as a prayer sent up to Heaven
I have a reverence for ancient walls
That stumble down the corridors of Time
As aged men, once bulwarks of the State.
I love the melancholy of a house Long vacant shutters closed like blind eyes,
And gables prostrate now as kneeling trees.
The air is holy round old lonely things,
The breath of primal gods with broken wings.
