WINTER VEGETABLE STORAGE. By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

Dry air and a temperature not lower than 50 degrees are necessary in the storage of "warm" crops.

In a basement where there is a furnace, dryness and proper warmth are assured by putting the sweet potatoes and the cushaws on shelves hung just under the rafters, or in bushel baskets hung by their handles on spikes driven into the rafters. Here there will be enough movement of air to ventilate properly.

A closet next to a chimney flue is excellent, provided the door is opened for a half hour or so whenever the air smells stale. Likewise, boxes of sweet potatoes, covered with carpet or sacking to hold the warmth overnight, may be piled about the chimney flue in an attic. Packing with sand or sawdust helps to hold heat, and so does wrapping the potatoes individually in newspaper. The latter also helps to prevent the spread of rots that may be present in the potatoes. The floor over a room, in which a fire is kept is a good place to store boxes or baskets of sweet potatoes, but covered with sacking to bridge over the night.

Returning to the basement, a room without a furnace may be used, but some heating means must be provided. Also, there should be a way to change the air when it becomes musty or when moisture gathers on the ceiling joists. If there is a chimney opening, it may be opened to serve as the outlet and to draw in fresh air; sacking may be hung across a doorway into another part of the basement to clear the floor by 3 inches, with a coal oil heater or a lantern placed just inside to warm and dry the air as it passes. Where no chimney opening is provided, the door way covering should have a 3-inch opening both at the top and at the floor. When both are open, there is continuous movement of air within the room.

Trials teach mortals not to lean on a material staff,—a broken reed, which pierces the heart. We do not half remember this in the sunshine of joy and prosperity.—Mary Baker Eddy.

Remains Of Prehistoric Monsters Are Unearthed As Experts Dig Deep Into Grounds At Blue Licks Park

Self-appointed geologists mingle (above) with a small group of professional men at Blue Licks State Park in a trench where 25,000-year-old bones and teeth of mastodons and mammoths were discovered Sunday. The trench was scooped out by an Army type bull-dozer and the day's find in prehistoric animal remains was termed by participating scientists as highly satisfactory.

Blue Licks State Park in Nicholas county was the scene Sunday of unusual activity as over 600 persons gathered there for a second exploratory digging into the soil in search of bones and tusks of animals which roamed this country 25,000 to 30,000 years ago.

Those who took part in the excavating considered the day's haul rarely profitable—many bones and a few tusks of mammoths and mastodons, all estimated to have been deposited there at least 25,000 years ago, were uncovered during the day's digging.

The work which was supervised by a small group of scientists headed by Major Victor K. Dodge of Lexington and Dr. W. R. Johnson of Frankfort, state geologist, was done with the aid of an Army type D-8 bulldozer. Assisting Major Dodge and Dr. Johnson were Dr. Charles E. Snow of the University of Kentucky Department of Anthropology and Prof. William Haag, curator of the University of Kentucky museum.

Newspaper invitations issued in advance of Sunday's activities to witness the digging were accepted by 600 or more spectators, many of whom volunteered to assist the dozer's blade and unearth the fragmentary remains of the prehistoric creatures.

Five 12-foot-wide trenches were dug in the vicinity of the old Blue Licks spring, which mysteriously ran dry back before the turn of the century. All were near the site of two trenches which were dug by a party headed by Major Dodge last Oct. 15, when similar bones and tusks were found. Most lucrative of the trenches dug Sunday was located between the two 1945 diggings, which had been filled after their exploration.

Dr. Jillson announced that the mastodon and mammoth bones found Sunday were found at depths ranging from 48 to 57 inches below the earth's surface, and Major Dodge observed that they were located just a few inches above the bottom rock which was found in the trenches.

Most of the bones were in poor condition, but those nearest the spring—which once was reputed as a source of health-giving waters—were best preserved. The scientists attributed this factor to the sulphur-salt content of the water and soil at that point.

Probably the richest discovery was that of several mastodon tusks in the last trench. One of these, Major Dodge pointed out, had a perfectly preserved tip, a condition not experienced before in tusks located in this area.

While many of the bones were soft and flaky with age, one 50-inch tusk was lifted out in such condition that its broken parts can be secured back in place, Major Dodge said.

Several "excellent" specimens of mastodon teeth were uncovered, along with a large mastodon jaw-bone, a leg bone, numerous vertebrae, ribs and other bones from prehistoric animals.

Dr. Jillson announced that the bones and tusks found there will be taken to the University of Kentucky museum where Prof. Haag will assort them and apply preservatives. Major Dodge pointed out that these bones are the property of the Pioneer National Monument Association, of which Judge Samuel M. Wilson of Lexington is president.

He added that Prof. Haag probably would give a lecture on the finds and discoveries at the next monthly meeting of the Kentucky Archeological Society, of which Major Dodge is a member.

A return trip to the site of the discovery of the mastodon and the mammoth bones is contemplated for about the first of October, Major Dodge announced. He said that some of the bones found late in the afternoon had to be left there and covered up again with the bulldozer, since the contract for the excavation included the provision that the trenches were to be filled in before the party left the site.

Major Dodge expressed satisfaction with the success of the operation and said that further examination and study of the bones, along with notes taken concerning their discovery, would prove of great value.

Undergoes Operation

Miss Mildred Gaunce, a member of the Marshall and Gaunce Confectionery, submitted to an emergency appendectomy Monday at the Good Samaritan hospital, Lexington. Her condition is reported satisfactory.

Coaches Guests At Rotary Meet

Tebay Rose and Don Fair, Carlisle high school coaches, were guests at the regular meeting of the Carlisle Rotary Club Thursday night. Mr. Rose made a talk on the prospects of the local team for the coming season, Robert Davis, program chairman, introduced the guests.

Injured In Wreck

Meyer Goldfold, 52, a tarpaulin salesman of Cincinnati, was brought to the Johnson Memorial hospital in an ambulance at noon Tuesday suffering from multiple injuries received when his truck overturned near the home of Ermine Ritchie near Carlisle. He received a spine injury and several ribs and his collar bone were fractured. After being treated here he was taken to St. Joseph's hospital, Lexington.

Nicholas Circuit Court To Convene Monday

The September term of Nicholas circuit court will convene here Monday with Circuit Judge J. C. Dedman presiding and the interests of the Commonwealth being cared for by Commonwealth's Attorney A. H. Barker and Nicholas County Attorney Roger Womack. The docket includes a number of old and new equity cases. The trial of Foster Bussell, charged with the killing of Gaylord Anderson here last December is among criminal cases.

2,000 Attend Legion Horse Show; All Events Are 'Highly Successful'

A throng estimated at 2,000 persons crowded the bleachers at the Carlisle fairgrounds Sunday afternoon to witness the second day right to witness the second Nicholas County Horse Show sponsored by the American Legion.

The exhibition, termed by most observers as the most successful yet staged in Carlisle, attracted a large number of entries in all classes, and exhibitors included leading horsemen from all over Central Kentucky. More than 100 horses were entered in the 17 classes shown Friday night.

The class for Nicholas county horses was particularly popular, 29 exhibitors competing in this class alone.

Other events, staged in conjunction with this year's horse show, were equally successful. An unusually large and enthusiastic crowd packed the Armory here for the horse show dance Thursday night and Alex Crace, Legion dance chairman, expressed satisfaction this week at the success of that affair in all and both local and out-of-town people.

Roger Stone of Lexington, widely known foxhound judge, officiated as judge of a foxhound bench show held Friday afternoon under auspices of the Nicholas County Foxhunters Association. A total of 112 entries were made in the 12 rings. Boy Blount of Carlisle served as ringmaster, and County Attorney Roger Womack was show chairman.

Saturday night's horse-pulling contest, an annual competition which always attracts a large group of eager spectators, was disrupted early in the evening when a team of competing horses driven by Frank Wilson of Carlisle became frightened and ran into a barbed wire fence, injuring a boy, a spectator, and crippling both horses so badly almost a score of other spectators.

Phillip Sugg, the youngster injured man, suffered several fractures in addition to minor injuries, and after receiving first aid attention at the local hospital was removed to the St. Joseph hospital in Lexington. His condition there was described Wednesday by attendants as critical.

J. Hanks Plank of Washington Court House, Ohio, was judge of the horse show; Nathan Young of Carlisle was ringmaster, and Bud Hamilton of Winchester served as announcer. Father Crain of the St. John's Catholic church presented the ribbons to the winners.
