It's Red Cross Time

Dinnster strikes! Whether fire or flood, hurricane or tornado, or other catastrophe, the Red Cross is there, sheltering the homeless, feeding the hungry and providing nursing care for the injured. That is Red Cross Time!

The unfortunate, the ill and those in need know its ministering touch. The serviceman, the veteran, and their families see it in action. All know that in time of trouble they can turn to the Red Cross. Then, more than ever, it's Red Cross Time!

Created by the people, composed of the people, the Red Cross serves all people. No duty passes without its help reaching someone in every community throughout our land.

To carry on its nationwide program of service, the Red Cross ask each year calls upon the American people to decide whether it has been a "good and faithful servant," and if so judged, to continue their support. Throughout the month of March the Red Cross is making its 1948 appeal to the public to help sustain its humanitarian activities—activities that for every dollar expended bring five to tenfold return in human welfare.

No truer words were ever spoken than those uttered by President Truman when he said: "Many times a year the people turn to the Red Cross. Once a year the Red Cross turns to the people."

Let those of us who are fortunate enough to be on the giving rather than the receiving end, remember that it takes more dollars today to do a job equal to that of former years.

The Case For The Free Market

It will be some time before we know definitely whether the heavy fluctuations that have taken place in the price of certain basic commodities indicate that inflation is being checked. But they have been an excellent example of the sensitivity of the free market.

The free market accurately reflects conditions. In the long range, it is dominated by the supply and demand factor. It is the only kind of market which is responsive to the changing winds of governmental policy, public confidence, and the economic picture in general.

The controlled market, whether the controls be imposed on the wholesale or retail level, must always fail. It is an attempt to deny actuality—to establish, by fiat, a set of conditions which do not exist. This is inevitably followed by two developments. First, producers drop out of lines which are no longer profitable under a controlled price, and turn to something, usually of a luxury nature, that offers a better chance of profit. Second, as goods become scarce, the black market flourishes. The normal, established agencies of trade are no longer able to adequately supply the needs of the consumer.

This has happened in every country which has joined its faith on price fixing, rationing, allocations, and other controls. It was beginning to happen here before OPA was abandoned—the black market was turning into a national scandal. Some could buy what they wanted by paying through the nose for it. The rest of us went without. —30—

Modern history is the strongest advocate of the free market. The evidence cannot be denied.

Worse Than The Blitz

What would you think if you were told that in a single year fire loss in the United States was as great as the estimated property damage done in Great Britain during two years of the terrible German blitz?

You might doubt the accuracy of the statement. But the truth is that our 1947 waste was actually 75 percent greater than the loss England suffered in two years of blitz attack. And it was about twice as great as the damage done in the San Francisco fire which, after forty years, is still remembered as one of the most disastrous conflagrations in history.

Fire is now taking a record toll. There are various reasons, of which high replacement costs are among the more important. But, whether building costs are high or low, the main cause of fire is unaltered—it lies in human failure of some kind. Today inflation, combined with the building shortage, has made every house, store, factory and warehouse more valuable than before. It has, in addition, resulted in an overcrowding of buildings, thus increasing the value of their contents. Today every careless act is potentially far more destructive than in the past.

Fire can be compared to war as a killer and destroyer. And, like war, we can prevent fire if we sincerely want to. Prevention of war lies in the difficult field of international policy—prevention of fire can be accomplished here at home. Will we accept a challenge that is aimed directly at us all?

Chains On The Railroads

In one of her newspaper columns Eleanor Roosevelt made this interesting observation: "Railroads are still regulated as a monopoly even though they now compete with many other types of transportation."

The extent of railroad regulation is probably not completely understood by the public at large. The lines cannot change their rates nor issue securities without permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission. They cannot abandon old lines or build new ones without ICC sanction, nor can one railroad acquire another. The regulatory authorities have complete control over the wages paid to railroad workers working conditions, safety measures, accounting practices, standards of service and a hundred and one other matters. On top of that, state regulatory commissions and county and city ordinances all have a say as to railroad operation.

This stems from the early days when the railroads did have a monopoly on long-haul land transportation. But that monopoly has long since gone by the board. They are now in direct competition with the busses, the big trucking concerns, and the airlines. Even the private automobile is a major railroad competitor.

It can be soundly argued that the railroads are over-regulated. In any event, when government has life and death powers over a vital industry, a great obligation goes with it. It is the duty of the government to permit rates which will give the lines a fair return on their investment, and to make possible the kind of railroad betterment that is necessary to future national prosperity. It is the duty of the government, in its role as mediator of labor disputes, to pursue policies which are fair to both sides, and not weight the scales either way. In one fashion or another, the railroads have a bearing on every human activity, and they are the structure on which modern industry and agriculture are built and depend for existence. They are, as top military men have pointed out, at the heart of the national defense. The country must more thoroughly understand these factors.

Clennie's Comment

By Clennie Hollon

I made a mistake in reporting Mr. J. H Hieronymus' broken ribs. News sometimes gets twisted out of order when being retold. Mr. Hieronymus did not fall out of bed, neither was he kicked out of bed by his wife. This is how it happened. Mr. Hieronymus finished reading a Physical Culture magazine. He found in this magazine an article that appealed to him. He re-read it. He was right the first time. It did say that a famous Physical Culturist who also had tried turning several somersaults every day to make himself feel young again. According to the magazine article, it had worked. Mr. Hieronymus immediately laid his magazine aside and began to perform somewhat awkwardly. No one was home to see him stunting. He turned several somersaults, before he somehow became unbalanced while standing upon his head and fell against the bed. His ribs hit the bed roller and it is believed that a few of them were cracked. I hope that I do not make another mistake, such as the one I made last week, in my reporting of the Willilia news.

Cats like hawn. Elvin Hollon's five cats managed to get into his smokehouse one night last week and they almost devoured two big hams. Mr. Hollon was angry at his cats and threatened to kill all of them.

There was a loose plank in the floor of Courser Gabbard's smokehouse. He laid a big rock on it to keep the varmits from pushing it aside and coming in. (Nails are ten cents per pound). One night last week, Courser's big cat lifted the plank and rock aside. The cat ate quite a hunk out of a big ham. Courser threatened his cat.

My hen that cackled a week ago laid last week. She also died last week.

Dr. M. B. Gabbard told me how well she liked to care for chickens. I hope I am not mistaken, but I believe she said that she had 46 hens and that she got 55 eggs per day from them. Who wouldn't be proud of such hens as that. I didn't get the figures twisted. Somehow they do look odd.

L. Kincaid says that he is glad that his Indian Runner ducks are dead. These ducks didn't survive the last cold spell. They roosted up in trees. Their feet froze off during the cold spell, causing them to fall out of the trees and break their necks upon the frozen ground.

Someone told me that the State Highway Department had put up signs "MEN WORKING" signs along the highway. These yellow signs have been changed to "DEMOCRATS WORKING."

Bethel Deaton claims that he is glad the rabbit season is over. He wouldn't have had enough coat to last one more week longer. He says there's nothing like a piece of an old overall jacket to be used in smoking out rabbits. He uses all the pockets first. Then he starts on the jacket tail. About all there is left of Mr. Deaton's coat is the sleeves and a wide strip down the back.—The Beattyville Enterprise.

A recession is a period in which you tighten your belt. In a depression you have no belt to tighten, and when you have no pants to hold up, it's a panic!

Early History Of Carlisle And Nicholas County

TOWN REALIZES 30 CENTS FROM FIRST ASSESSMENT

"Of all the families ever reared in Carlisle, the Campbell family, of whom mention was made last week, was the most musical. Jesse, the youngest of the clan, was a splendid performer on the violin; he lived and died a bachelor. He was an ardent Henry Clay Whig and at several sessions of the Legislature was elected door keeper of the House.

"The second son, John Preston, was also a fine violinist. He eloped with Jane Metcalfe, daughter of Governor Thomas Metcalfe. Five children were born to this union. The mother died when her youngest child was a baby and some years afterwards Mr. Campbell married Mary, his wife's sister. They had two children. John Preston Campbell was a man of fine address, a shrewd business man. He was for many years a merchant at Forest Retreat and at one time a member of a wholesale grocery firm in Cincinnati. He died at Forest Retreat of cholera the day previous to the death of his father-in-law, the illustrious Governor Metcalfe.

"R. M. Campbell, the third son, resided for a number of years in Carlisle. 'Harry', as he was always called, was a very pleasant and genial gentleman, quite a favorite with the citizens. He moved to Woodford county, Ohio, where he spent all of his days. Mrs. John Razor.

KENTUCKY ON THE MARCH

By Carey Guthrie

"You would berate a penitent because he came to the mourner bench several years late," I told an old neighbor who, upon hearing that the organized bankers of Kentucky have an agriculture promotion program, was pinning them for their decades of inactivity in the past. He said the Kentucky Bankers Association had been neglecting a wonderful opportunity during fifteen years the Extension Service and the Farm Bureau Federation had been leading a state-wide campaign to erase gullies and make seventy-five bushels of corn grow where twenty bushels used to grow.

"A revolution in agricultural methods was going on right under the eyes of our bankers, yet they did next to nothing to help the movement." my friend went on to say. "They seldom went out of their way to extend credit to farmers. The production credit cooperatives came to our rescue with five per cent money when the banks were reluctant to lend money on livestock at 10. And as for going out of their swivel chairs and going out to visit farmers and encourage them—well, they just sat in their swivel chairs, held incense the glass on the seats of their pants.

"Yes, that may be true," I countered, "but you are looking the door when a penitent comes to church. Maybe 'penitent' is not one of our bank words. Perhaps they were just waiting for the KHA to do organization to wake up. Anyway, I think it is up to the farmers to welcome them wholeheartedly. The KHA is a chance to do a wonderful lot of good."

The KHA program is cleverly patterned after the Farm Bureau Federation and the Extension Service. Farmers can find fault with it. Its bulletins are well worth reading. The association has a full-time field agent. But in my humble opinion it would be better if the KHA were a local national work almost exclusively through agencies already existing. Duplication is a waste of energy and money. It sometimes breeds friction.

As a farmer working with the Bankers Association, Bowles and our local Farm Bureau for eleven years, I would suggest that the KHA have its field agent give most of his time to working with member bankers, persuading and encouraging them to do their share. The bankers real hours each week and go out into the country and prove that they are interested in what farmers are doing. Bailey, the Clinksville banker, has hitched a national celebrity by doing just that. Starting from scratch with some razzed farms tossed in his lap by the depression, Bailey started a sheep raising industry in a district which now has over 60,000 ewes. Bailey and two associates are still spending most of their afternoons visiting farms and promoting better agriculture on the county.

Gentlemen of the Kentucky Bankers Association, you have a grand and glorious opportunity. Go to it!

BALD HILL

By Laura O. Dotson

Lulie Shirrel Sutton, who had his tonsils removed last Friday a week ago in Lexington, is now at home greatly improved.

Maxine Dotson, age seven, has been seriously ill but is now at the local hospital much better. Her mother, Mrs Maxwell Dotson, who also has been very ill, is some better at her in-law's in this community.

We deeply regret the accident which happened to Clyde Letcher Jr., who is in a hospital in Lexington, and to Mrs. Sallie Ritchie who is in the local hospital, the former having the injured leg and the latter an injured back by falling during the slippery weather.

Aunt Mag Miller who has seemingly held her own during this snowy, blowy, wintry weather, is now as well as ever.

Estle Anderson and family have moved to Ellisville to the regret of neighbors but we are satisfied they will have good neighbors there.

Bald Hill wishes to extend heartfelt sympathy to the friends and relatives of Mrs. Maria Cannon, who spent her early youth in this community and had many friends here as well as every where she was known.

Moving and selling of property seems to now be in the wind, which, when completed will be reported at a later date.

The youth and many of the patrons are quite interested in Baseball, the 4-H Club, and the Parent Teacher Association, which are carried on at the consolidated schools of our county and elsewhere.

Mrs. Robert Jennings is substituting for Mrs. Henson in the fifth and sixth grades at Ellisville.

Bald Hill wishes to extend congratulations and all good wishes to Mr. Bill Sutton and daughter of Tom Jackson, whose marriage to Mr. Sutton occurred in Denson, Ky., took place last week at the Methodist church in Carlisle.

Mrs. Homer Miller of Carlisle was a guest of Mrs. Walter Flora Sunday afternoon.

BALD HILL

By Laura O. Dotson

Lulie Shirrel Sutton, who had his tonsils removed last Friday a week ago in Lexington, is now at home greatly improved.

Maxine Dotson, age seven, has been seriously ill but is now at the local hospital much better. Her mother, Mrs Maxwell Dotson, who also has been very ill, is some better at her in-law's in this community.

We deeply regret the accident which happened to Clyde Letcher Jr., who is in a hospital in Lexington, and to Mrs. Sallie Ritchie who is in the local hospital, the former having the injured leg and the latter an injured back by falling during the slippery weather.

Aunt Mag Miller who has seemingly held her own during this snowy, blowy, wintry weather, is now as well as ever.

Estle Anderson and family have moved to Ellisville to the regret of neighbors but we are satisfied they will have good neighbors there.

Bald Hill wishes to extend heartfelt sympathy to the friends and relatives of Mrs. Maria Cannon, who spent her early youth in this community and had many friends here as well as every where she was known.

Moving and selling of property seems to now be in the wind, which, when completed will be reported at a later date.

The youth and many of the patrons are quite interested in Baseball, the 4-H Club, and the Parent Teacher Association, which are carried on at the consolidated schools of our county and elsewhere.

Mrs. Robert Jennings is substituting for Mrs. Henson in the fifth and sixth grades at Ellisville.

Bald Hill wishes to extend congratulations and all good wishes to Mr. Bill Sutton and daughter of Tom Jackson, whose marriage to Mr. Sutton occurred in Denson, Ky., took place last week at the Methodist church in Carlisle.

Mrs. Homer Miller of Carlisle was a guest of Mrs. Walter Flora Sunday afternoon.
