FARMING IN WASHINGTON

Prices and Diets

Better diets for city folks and long-term price guarantees for farmers go hand in hand.

This fact, ignored by the city folks, was stressed last week in a background statement on price supports issued by the Agriculture Department.

If the nation ever faced the choice of scrapping or keeping farm supports, it would actually be deciding whether to keep maximum farm output—with the promise of better diets for everyone—or go back to the old days of boom and bust, and starvation in the midst of farm surpluses.

Supports, by encouraging expanded output, have "done more than anything else to hold food prices down and assure relatively plentiful food supplies in this country," the Department points out.

If the supports were scrapped, farm prices might fall so low that farmers could not afford to buy city goods. In an effort to restore farm purchasing power, the nation might again ask farmers to restrict, instead of expand their production.

Inference of the new statement is that the best way to ensure optimum diets is to keep supports and concentrate on maintenance of a high industrial output and a strong, well-distributed purchasing power in cities. AFBF favors this objective.

In the Open

Tired of beating around the bush, enemies of the farm program are now advocating complete abolition of supports.

Washington Daily News declared editorially last week "Our eventual goal should be abolition of the price-support policy altogether, and we should move toward that objective as rapidly as conditions permit."

This editorial was written after Roger Fleming, director of AFBF's Washington office, had answered by private letter to correct a prevailing story implying that farm groups opposed the Aiken long-range farm bill and therefore were responsible for preventing more flexible supports from going into effect before 1950.

Main argument of last week's editorial: farm supports are being used to keep inefficient farmers in production.

Fact is, fewer farm workers are now turning out about 70 percent more than in 1910-14. Fact is, true behind the press campaign against agriculture is not the inefficiency of the American farmer. It is whether or not those behind this campaign can pin the blame for inflation on the farmer and get away with it.

We have enough faith in informed public opinion and its passion for the truth, to believe that they can't.

Signs and Portents

Has U. S. agriculture passed the peak of its prosperity?

This question is on the minds of a lot of Washington economists these days. Agriculture Department has just issued a report tending toward an affirmative answer.

"The year 1947 may well be important turning point in farmers' financial well-being," states the report. It bases this rather cautious prediction on following factors:

Last year farmers' real income improved for first time since before the war. Net farm income bought six percent less than in 1946. Since beginning of 1948, prices paid by farmers have continued to rise more rapidly than prices received.

Officials are worried over the increase in farm-mortgage debt—about 100 million dollars in 1947. They attribute it to higher farm ex- during the 1920's.

Dollars and Exports

U. S. may not actually export as much food this year as its export goals call for.

This is the private opinion of some analysts just returned from Europe. "It isn't that they don't need our food over there, it's that they just don't have enough dollars with which to buy," reports one Agriculture Department official.

Despite the fact that foreign crops are a lot better this year, Foreign dollars are still need major U. S. foods and feed to improve dietary standards—this is particularly true in England and Germany.

Foreign diets are extremely monotonous.

However, European governments have to weigh food needs against such strategic recovery goods as steel, equipment and coal, in deciding how to spend their limited dollars most economically.

To a large extent, Congress is urging its food imports as an incentive to encourage miners and factory workers to produce more.

Only long-term solution to this is for the U. S. to buy more goods from Europe, so that other nations can obtain enough dollars to buy our farm products, the experts believe.

ECA Progress

Economic Cooperation Administration—operating agency for the European Recovery Program—is well along on its task of helping Europe to rebuild.

Last week, ECA officials announced that only $786,000,000 out of the agency's $5,055,000,000 appropriation has not yet been earmarked for foreign aid.

Department emphasizes that today's good times don't apply to all farmers. Incomes of many growers have not continued to increase.

One cheering note: total farm debt is still "materially lower" than ever before in history.

Only long-term solution to this is for the U. S. to buy more goods from Europe, so that other nations can obtain enough dollars to buy our farm products, the experts believe.

Tourist Trade Brings Millions Into State; 6,897 Visit Blue Licks

Kentucky tourist trade reached an overall value of $161,774,152 during 1947, according to a Department of Highways estimate based on total motor vehicle travel in state parks.

A department survey revealed motor vehicle travel on Kentucky highways last year totaled 2,016,7 253,728 miles of which one-fourth, or 1,254,063,432 miles, was pleasure travel. Out-of-state tourist travel constituted half the total pleasure travel, or 627,031,716 miles.

"Assuming the Kentucky tourist's average day's travel to be 200 miles, and allowing three persons to each car, we find that individual tourist days spent in Kentucky during 1947 totaled 9,405,474," the survey stated.

The department further estimated expenditure of $17.50 an individual for each tourist day, amounting in total expenditure for the year of $161,774,152.

"The volume of trade brought into the state as a result of this tourist travel is difficult to estimate," the report stated. "We have tried to arrive at an average per-person-per day expenditure figure. Admitting that some tourists travel at a lower daily cost and higher at a lower figure than the daily individual expenditure at $6.50 for meals and lodging, $4.30 for retail stores, $1.60 for amusements and $4.94 for car expense."

The Department of Conservation's Division of Parks reported Kentucky state parks, high on the list of tourist attractions, drew a total of 402,000 persons during 1947.

The Parks Division listed as the leading attraction Cumberland Falls State Park which 108,228 persons visited last year. Attendance at other parks and shrines was Butler State Park, 64,810; Old Kentucky Home State Shrine, 64,196; Pennyrile State Park, 43,647; Audubon State Park, 35,690; Jefferson Memorial State Park, 29,086; Dawson Springs State Park, 15,452; Natural Bridge State Park, 12,580; Jefferson Davis Monument, 9,832; Blue Licks Battlefield State Park, 6,897; Carter Caves State Park, 6,594; Colonel Harland Sanders State Park, 2,428 and Levi Jackson State Park, 1,251.
