BIBLE COMMENT

Early Christians Failed in Trials Of Communism

THROUGHOUT the Christian centuries there have been individuals who have sought the Christian teaching of love, brotherhood, and sharing in communistic groups or societies.

The Christ has never been removed, in nature, spirit, and purpose, from the ideal of communism of Plato, which is dictatorship, state control, and totalitarianism, founded on force and fear of others with inferiors, then brotherly love. Nevertheless, these experiments in Christian communism failed, partly because Christian individualism is not easily destroyed, but more because of weakness and lack of fidelity to the common aims in members of the community.

The first of these communistic experiments was among the early Christians, who, we are told in Acts 4:32, "had all things in common." But, manifestly, it did not last well. Barnabas, a thoroughly good man, sold his land, and turned the money into the common fund. If all the Christians had done like him, and if all Christians were like him today, the story might be different. But Ananias, who professed to do the same thing, was a liar, and a thief, and a liar, and his wife, Sapphira, was a liar and a thief.

One can see, too, what happened in the Jerusalem church, that certain ladies were expecting daughter-in-law Christians to take care of them. Paul said that Christian ladies and gentlemen don't work that way. If mutual burden-bearing was a duty of Christians, it was also the duty of each to bear his own share. It is a disgrace if a man in the Christian group did not pay his monthly rent bill.

Paul and Barnabas, after their first missionary journey, had disagreement. It was over whether they should take with them a young man, a nephew of Barnabas, who had left them at Perga, and who, Luke, the physician, tells us, was a "deserter." Our Christian communism failed.

Preachers of the church of Christ, who are holding a tent meeting in the famous Park in Mooresville, Indiana, are being visited by Dotson Wednesday.

Mrs. Madison and son of Detroit, Mich., are the guest of Mrs. Newman and Mr. Madison and Mr. Newman are daughter and son of the late George Newman, who was killed in a wreck on the Ogden farm, and from whom the farm was purchased by the late A. F. Ogden. They both are in, viewing this old homestead and locating their relatives.

Mrs. Josie and Murgill Gaunce, of Detroit, Mich., are visiting relatives two sons were in Sunday to see their father, McPherson McDoe.

Dolores Conrad is visiting her uncle, Earl Salters, in Louisville this week.

Mrs. G. I. Sellers, Mrs. Conrad, Mrs. Walter Flora, and the ladies, perhaps others have been taken gandstange of the camers at Mammoth Cave, which certainly a help to the ladies. There is such an air of cheerfulness and neighborliness about the cave and caverns. Those who are waiting help and advice are provided medical care, and are provided with another follows it out from here, which reminds us of a passage in the Bible, "Who hath this world's goods and sheltered his brother, and withdrawn from him, and seeth his brother in need how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Our brotherhood certainly a boon to the adjoining communities.

Monday morning shone bright and clear, some cooler, but the afternoon was mostly warm and wet. Many are hauling or having hauled from Millersburg, Paris, and Mt. Sterling.

True politeness is perfect ease and freedom. It simply consists in treating others just as you love to be treated yourself.—Chesterfield

True politeness requires humility, self denial, and benevolence. To think more highly of ourselves than we ought to think, destroys its fundamental principle.—Lydia H. Sigourney

CLOVER NEEDS FOUR-LEAF

Give your clovers a good big helping of their favorite food—Phosphorus—and watch them grow! Feeding hungrily on FOUR-LEAF PHOSPHATE, the phosphorus, the clovers take their nitrogen from the free air. You get a huge increase in clover production, richer clover for livestock—and all following crops benefit from the increased soil phosphorus, nitrogen, and organic matter. Grow phosphated clovers—for low-cost soil improvement.

Catholic Information

JUST WHAT IS A PRIEST?

Catholic priests—You've seen them, no doubt many of them. Perhaps you have talked with some and even know one or more intimately. If so you know they are them rather regular human beings, haven't you. Well, so they are and so they are not, but let us tell you briefly.

The Catholic priest was once a new born baby, a baby boy. As a youth he chose his own career. He applied for admission to school and was admitted after passing rigid tests for strength of mind, body, and character.

In the seminary he lived and studied and prayed for about twelve years—studied for the first six years, Latin, Greek, Modern languages, English, history, and mathematics; then came two years of logic, psychology, ethics advanced physical science, Hebrew and other subjects. At the end of the eighth year he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts (recognized by the State) and entered upon him. Then he continued for four years of post-graduate work in Sacred Scripture, Church history and pastoral theology, canon law, and liturgy. And finally, by the laying on of the hands of the Bishop, he was ordained a priest of God.

And so, dear neighbor, when you next see a Catholic priest, you will be looking at a member of what is undoubtedly the most highly educated class of men in the world. but, more than that, a man who has St. Paul himself pats at, "taken from among men, ordained for men in things that appertain to God."

NEWS IN THE WORLD OF RELIGION By W.W. REID

All three major religious groups in the United States will hold special religious services, prayers, appeals on the rights and rights of labor, in synagogues and churches, and Sunday, Labor Day, September 4 and 7. In some of the religious centers, labor unions and other groups will attend the services in a body. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has a special Labor Day message which will be read from many Protestant pulpits.

One of the two national warriors of a Parshad National Youth Week College scholarship competition announced by the United Church of America; the United Christian Missionary Society, and the Evangelical United Brethren. In American these have formed the "Inter-Board Committee for Work in Japan." The counterpart in Japan is the "Council of Cooperation." This is composed of nine representatives of the Kyodan, eight representatives of the Christian Education Association, and eight missionaries. These eight churches have agreed not to organize independent missions again but to carry on their work through this Council of Cooperation. The Northern Baptist Convention is working in the Kyodan and is officially affiliated with the Council of Cooperation though not a regular member. "In the initial stages of the Council there are many problems to be faced, but we do believe that we are pioneering in a new method of carrying on the evangelization of the world," says Dr. John B. Cobb, of Macon, Georgia, one of the missionary members.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

"Man" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in all Christian Science churches throughout the world on Sunday. The Golden Text is: "Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness and wisdom." (James 3:13)

Among the citations which compose this Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "How precious also are thy thoughts, O God! therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings." (Ps. 36:7) "Wisdom is the foundation of life: in thy light shall we see light." (Ps. 36:7, 9)

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "Man is the family name for all ideas, —the sons and daughters of God. All that God imparts manifests in accord with Him, reflecting goodness and power." (P. 515)

TIDBITS of KENTUCKY

By Dr. Gordon Wilson

It is a pleasant year again, and the air is electric with patriotism. The two major parties are at their most exciting game of name-calling. Ward-beelers of all sizes are sprung up like weeds, calling on them to save the country from the other party. All this sounds very patriotic. The only queer thing about it is that the whole game of politics has not improved with age. In the years that I studied and taught Latin I found that the Roman Republic did more talking about the way it is done now. We have been severely strained by the centrifugal forces of politics, and we are located and more widely traveled than our pioneer ancestors were in the wilderness, but we take our politics in the same manner that the old-timers did. If a new recruit to America were to look in on our conventions and our political speakings, he might fear that our system, whatever it is, is in a desperate state. It is not so at all. But, if he stayed around a while, he would discover that we are playing a great national game that even goes beyond baseball or football or basketball in enthusiasm.

The pattern was well established long before I arrived at Field Ely. However, what we did then and there could be transferred to Rome. It is a game that goes on where without being recognized as coming from a remote country visitor, I, in his place, would be in the true 100 per cent brand, the only kind of politics that anyone professes to have. We might be divided into Methodists and Baptists and Christians. But the campaign opened, but after that we were Democrats, almost to a man. The Republicans were rare and, therefore, very quiet. In spite of that we knew that Roosevelt was elected from the Democratic Party from Cleveland to Wilson, we were told every time that this polled on the country by the other party would be shaken off permanently. The Pools conclusion for the Republicans were gone and older days was restored; but the day after the election we discovered that the Republicans were still sitting pretty in the seats of the mighty.

National politics were always fascinating, but they did not often bring bloody noses, as did local politics. As everybody was a Democrat, it took a local election to bring out the fighting qualities of us all. Our own particular leaders spoke in every part of the county, for weeks before the election. In some races a fierce rivalry developed, so that partisans followed their candidates for miles and miles, and even when they got too loud in their loyalty to someone else. The great American institution of holding an election through loss of votes to some, bloody noses to others, a terrible lot of grass in the tobacco patches, and a sort of satisfaction in being able to put one's enemy in a place.

Now isn't that really funny? It is so much like 1948 that it seems a transcription of almost any day in our lives. Unquestionably the whole world is watching us right now, some of our pretended friends hoping that our system will not work again as it has worked in the past. Some of the helpless, young nations perhaps are watching, too, afraid that they may get caught in the middle and thus stop any prospect of future aid from Uncle Sam. There is a lesson in all this, though, if all, a sort of boyish boastfulness that we have been enjoying for a long time go in the natural process of development. Just why we are in this world is one of the primitive woods in this sphere of thinking, we are not enlightened elsewhere is more than I, from remote Fidelity, can figure out. When I listen to the radio at early the morning paper in this midsummer time, I wonder how it would feel to go back to Fidelity to listen to the speeches in the old union church when it seemed that the heavens would fall if anyone spoke out of turn, be a jailer or sheriff orassessor. Maybe Fidelity was not so funny, after all.

Prices and the Farmer

Don't blame farm price supports for high food prices. The real cause is expanded consumer demand in relation to supply. Look at the record. Farm prices have not kept pace with other prices, based on 90 percent of parity, are far below current market prices.

"If beef and lamb prices were supported at 90 percent of parity, these supports would be only about 50 percent of current market prices," he elaborated.

Fleming concluded: "During this period, when apparently everyone is looking for a scapegoat for inflation, farmers and urban people alike might well keep their eye on the ball rather than listen to distractions from the grandstand."
