Social Religion Is Based Upon Personal Religion

One hears talk often of "social religion" and "the social Gospel." It is understandable that such phrases, with their emphasis, should come into use in protest against the idea that religion is a mushy, or purely, individualistic, personal matter.

But such phrases actually are redundant. Can one imagine a religion that has in it any truth or any demands of duty that is not social? And, most certainly if there were a gospel that is not social, it would not be the Christian gospel. At every point in His teaching Jesus emphasized love and duty of man to man, and the fellowship of brotherhood. So much as man's own personal faith and his relationship to God.

The Hebrew prophets had essentially a social outlook. They thought of "Israel" as a people chosen and called of God, a nation with God-given privileges and responsibilities for that people and nation; they were supremely devoted in a loyalty that was really a matter of religious intensity. They thought of the nation and the people as a whole, and they had much to say regarding the conditions and principles that made for national happiness, security and welfare. Righteousness exalteth a nation. "Happy is that nation whose God is the Lord."

But with that social outlook they stressed the need and primary place of personal righteousness. A sound nation could be built only upon sound individuals. Hence every element of personal evil and unrighteousness was an offense not only against God, but an offense against the nation as well, weakening it in its inherent strength and endangering it in the facing of its enemies. Social religion could be strong only when personal religion was sound.

Who can estimate the strength and power of a nation, democratically organized, in which every citizen was exercising his kingly right of self-government? That's an ideal for humanity.

There's Plenty Electric Power For All Kentucky's Demands, Watt Says

There is not today nor has there been any power shortage for the 19 Rural Electric Cooperative Corporations served by Kentucky Utilities Company, R. M. Watt, president of that concern, declared this week in a report to the stockholders from Washington that the Rural Electrification Administration had approved a $10,265,000 loan to the East Kentucky Rural Electric Cooperative Corporation to help relieve a power shortage in eastern Kentucky.

Mr. Watt said his company supplied the power needs to the first Rural Electric Cooperative in Kentucky, under rates established by the Public Service Commission of Kentucky, under a contract dated May, 1936. This contract called for the delivery of 150 kilowatts of capacity. Today, this same cooperative is being supplied 14 times this original capacity at four different locations.

Mr. Watt declared this same general situation exists with all of the 19 Rural Electric Cooperatives supplied by K. U. which are now receiving service at 46 different points of delivery.

"The capacity had additional capacity brought about by the expansion of rural electric service has been provided by Kentucky Utilities as needed," Mr. Watt said. "Before, during and since the war Kentucky Utilities Company has never failed to provide the Rural Electric Cooperative requiring it from its transmission facilities.

"The capacity has been supplied by the Company in spite of the fact that from 1941 to 1945 the Company was not able to install additional generating and transmission facilities because of the scarcity of critical materials brought about by the war.

"From the end of the War until this date, Kentucky Utilities Company has spent approximately $6,000,000 for the enlargement and improvement of its system. In 1948 the Company completed and brought into operation a large steam generating plant on the Kentucky river near Tyrone and is now completing a new steam generating plant on the Green River near Central City.

"The first generating unit in the Green River plant will be in operation this month. Kentucky Utilities Company has completed a high-power transmission line connecting this Western Kentucky generating plant to its Central and Eastern system."

Whitley county 4-H club members sold 45 calves for $6,400 at the Whitley County Kentucky 4-H club baby beef show and sale, topping other counties in numbers. Betty Sue Sutton of Corbin received $32.45 a hundred for the highest selling calf in the county.

Twelve homemakers clubs in Henderson county had window displays in co-operation with the fall exhibit sponsored by Henderson retail merchants.

Kentucky 4-H Girl Sectional Winner

An annual record in recreation and arts was for Miss Carol L. Williams, 17, of Crestwood, Oldham county, a trip to the National 4-H Club Congress in Chicago the week of Nov. 28. She was named one of eight sectional winners in the United States.

Miss Williams was a junior club leader for five years, a recreation leader five years and a song leader for two years. She attended three recreation workshops and assisted two years with crafts at district camps. She directed folk games and other 4-H recreation in several counties, and as president of the Brownsboro 4-H Club, she managed the fair put on by that organization.

Plan Recreation Program

For the second time, proceeds from the annual Junction City fair in Boyle county are being used in the recreation program of the community. Last year, tennis courts, swings and a soft ball diamond with lights were some of the improvements made at the high school arranged for from the fair profits. This year's proceeds will provide funds for outdoor furniture and equipment for older people as well as for youngsters, said County Agent John C. Brown of Boyle county, cooperating with the community, including farm crops.

Poultry Owners To Have Better Flocks

How the Kentucky Poultry Improvement Association is helping poultry flock owners improve their flocks was discussed at a recent meeting by Mike Duff of the poultry department, Kentucky Agricultural Institute and Hoyt Kennedy, president of the association, at a group of poultry flock owners from Hart, Hardin, Warren, Nelson, Bullitt, Henry, Oldham, Spencer, Shelby, Trimble, Carroll, Gallatin, Boone, Kenton, Campbell, Bracken, Pendleton and Owen counties.

The association is a group of poultry flock owners, including hatchery producers, hatcheries and hatching egg producers, farmers and flock owners enrolled in the National Poultry Improvement Plan.

The national plan was formed in 1935, in answer to problems which at that time had the poultry industry in a state of confusion. The plan has been a great success. 2. Improving breeding and production qualities.

2. Reducing losses from disease. 3. Making practical application of improved practices and scientific discovery.

4. Protecting membership from unscrupulous competition and producing a quality product which customer can buy with confidence.

Flock owners buying chicks from hatcheries enrolled in the improvement plan had less than half the loss they had when getting chicks from uncertified flocks, Duff said. Hens are averaging by eggs more than when the plan was launched in 1935.

Alfalfa Does Well For Laurel Farmer

For 15 years Nay Chestnut of Rt. 4, London, has been growing high-quality alfalfa hay. He now has 8½ acres from one to six years old. He sows about two acres each August.

Mr. Chestnut cuts his alfalfa four times a year. From the first and second cuttings he gets about a ton of hay to the acre at each cutting, and then about three-fourths of a ton at each of the other two cuttings, making a yearly yield of three and a half tons to the acre. He said he prefers a ton of alfalfa hay to two tons of any other hay.

In answer to questions about preparing the land for alfalfa, Mr. Chestnut said he selects well-drained land, preferably of the clay type, and usually sows following tobacco. Plenty of inoculated seed is sown.

About a ton of ground limestone an acre is spread every five years, to keep up the lime needs of the soil. With it is spread 500 pounds of 20 percent superphosphate on the first year seeding. A thousand pounds of complete fertilizer is used for growing tobacco.

Growing alfalfa is like a checking account in a bank, said Mr. Chestnut "every one adds plant food for the alfalfa, the food in the soil is checked, just as a bank account grows when money is constantly deposited. Each year he top-dresses with 500 pounds an acre of complete fertilizer, such as 4-12-4, and if possible, one hundred pounds of 34 percent muriate of potash. Twenty pounds of boron an acre is used in the four-cut period.

This year, along with the VFW and other organizations who annually collect toys and other articles for disbursal throughout the town and county, the Girl Scout troops and members of the Nicholas Youth Center are asking for toys, in any condition, donations, clothing and especially old stone books.

Next week, these youth will work over toys, mend clothing, buy candy, fruit and nuts with donations and collect comic books from anyone who has a stack they have already read. (Call 98 and someone will come to your door.)

Boxes for student collections have been placed in the NCHS and Carlisle High schools. It is hoped that other schools in the county will follow suit.

As traditional as the seasons, as well done as a Christmas turkey, such cards and letters said of "Come With The Wind."

Blue Jacket-Musketeer Cage Tilt Friday Night To Be Battle Royal

By Emily Asbury

Nicholas County High and Carlisle basketeers will fight to the bitter end here tomorrow night in the first of two scheduled games with the winners to decide the annual issue of which school wears the mythical County Cage Jules. The two quintets meet again January 31 at Headquarters.

The county-town school basketball rivalry is as hotly contested and feverishly fought as a Ky.-Tennessee football game. Last year the Musketeers met and narrowly defeated the Blue Jackets three times—twice during the season and in a post-season district tournament in Paris.

However, this year the county five led by sophomore guard Donnie Gaunce, who has collected 164 points in 10 games for a 16.4 average rates a slight edge over the Musketeers who have won only 1 game in seven starts, a 37-35 win over Mt. Sterling.

On the other hand, NCHS has scored 410 points in 10 starts. Wins came at the expense of Demoss, 44-36, Williamstown, 29-27, Berry, 57-38, North Middletown, 49-27 and Paris, 51-40.

Losses were to Corinth 37-43, Bourbon Vocational, 35-45, Kirksville, 38-54, Owensville, 44-48 and Maysville, 41-48.

Musketeer losses have been marked by the bands of Sharpsburg, 47-41, St. Patrick, 57-24 and Southern Plum, 54-53. Wins have come against Ashland, 71-44, and Fleming County, 64-42.

Nicholas 150 Years Old Sunday, Dec. 18

Next Sunday, Dec. 18, marks the 150th anniversary of the establishment of Nicholas county, which was established December 18, 1799. The county was formed out of portions of Bourbon and Mason counties. In 1867, a part of the county was cut off to help form Robertson county.

The county was named in honor of Col. George Nicholas, who was a Captain in the War of the Revolution. He was afterwards an officer in the Virginia Militia and a member of the Virginia Convention called to consider the adoption of the Constitution of the United States.

Colonel Nicholas came to Mercer county in 1788 and was elected a member of Kentucky's first Constitutional convention. He was the first professor of the Law department of Transylvania University and was one of the most able lawyers of his day.

He was also engaged in iron smelting on Slate Creek in what is now Bath county. He died five months after our county was named for him, at the age of 55 years.
