Don't Let Death Take Your Holiday!

The wreath is a traditional symbol of Christmas. In windows and on front doors of homes all over America, the bright red and green of holly will signify the joyous festivities of the holiday season.

For Christmastime should be a time of happiness. Every family looks forward to the joy and celebration that the holiday period should bring. But every year thousands of families in our country see Christmas joy turned into suffering and tragedy because of needless and preventable accidents.

The National Safety Council points out that hundreds of persons are killed and thousands more injured by accidents during the Christmas-New Year's holiday season—the year's peak accident period. The No. 1 killer is traffic, and its death toll on Christmas Day is two or three times the annual average.

To keep death from taking your holiday—or the holiday of your loved ones—is a simple thing. It costs nothing, takes no time and requires only a little effort. It only means being aware of the extra holiday hazards and of the extra caution, common sense and courtesy needed to overcome them.

Refuse to drink if you are driving. Wait for the light to change. Yield the right-of-way. Discard a string of Christmas tree lights with worn insulation. Throw away gift wrappings as soon as presents are opened.

These are little things—but they pay off big in holiday happiness. These little extras go a long way toward keeping the happiness in your home and the red and green holly wreath on your door.

They will preserve for you and your loved ones the joy and delight that is America at Christmas.

The motorist pays in the long run.

JEST AMONG US...

By Jack Wild

UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY

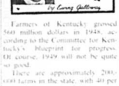
Not long ago I represented the University of Kentucky at a national convention in Washington, D. C., one feature of which was a reception given for the delegates by the National Press Club. I was late getting over to the big Press Club building, and told the elevator operator to let me off at the floor where the reception was being held.

As I emerged from the lift, a jovial-faced gentleman stepped forward, grasped my hand, and let me know his name, which I have since forgotten. I was somewhat amazed at the warm reception but managed to stammer that I was Wild from Kentucky. That made the greeter beam as he introduced me to a second man, who also beamed and whisked me down a long corridor to a closed door, upon which he rapped lightly several times, possibly in code. The door swung open and another one stepped out. This is Wild from Kentucky," my companion said (like he was introducing a celebrity), and dragged it this third gentleman didn't start beaming too. These were without a doubt the beamingest men I'd ever met up with in a long association with beamers.

The large room into which I was led was dark and I heard someone talking; first sounded like Jimmy Stewart. It was Jimmy Stewart, talking to some lady who was up there on a screen with him in front of the room. My newest and friend waved for an usher. "This is Wild from Kentucky," he said in a hushed voice so as not to disturb Mr. Stewart. "Find a good seat for him." He did, right on the center aisle, and he left me sitting there feeling pretty important.

As my eyes grew accustomed to the gloom, I looked around at my neighbors but didn't recognize any of the other convention delegates. I looked again, and again. Quick like a fox, then, I realized the room was crowded with men I'd never seen before. But why had everybody seen so glad to see me? I nudged the fellow sitting next to me. "I'm Wild from Kentucky," I whispered. "What university do you represent?" He looked at me hard. "Sss, old buddy," he whispered back, hoarsely. "Y-you're in the right place! This is Happy Chandler's party!"

It was fun, all right, but I'll bet I've never taken for a baseball player again.



Farmers of Kentucky grossed $60 million dollars in 1949, according to the Committee for Kentucky's Blueprint for progress. Of course, 1949 will not be quite so good.

There are approximately 200,000 farms in the state, with 40 per cent of the people on them.

In the last 20 years farm products in the state has increased 41 percent.

In 1940 only 15 per cent of the farm homes in Kentucky were electrified. Increased 55 per cent in 9 years. We are about 40 percent behind Illinois.

Estimates based on gains in states in which surveys have been made double the number of country homes with running water, baths, flush toilets, since 1940. The R. E. A. is largely responsible for this gain. Our own Henderson-Union electric coop reaches 80 percent of the farms in the two counties.

There are 250 vocational agriculture teachers training boys and girls in 225 high schools in scientific agriculture, and the authors of the Committee for Kentucky's chapter on farming and rural life—Thomas P. Cooper, J. I. Mantford, J. W. Jones, J. Allen Smith, J. B. Kelley and Myrtle Weldon—say the state needs a total of 500 of these vocational teachers to work in 325 high schools.

About 3,500 adult farmers are enrolled in vocational agriculture classes.

Seventy thousand boys and girls are enrolled in projects fostered by the Extension Service in Agriculture and Home Economics.

With public support and redoubled efforts of civic leaders the progress noted in the foregoing paragraphs can be doubled in the next 10 years. The ways are already widely known. The means and the effort will do the rest.

The seeds of progress have been sprinkled in the minds of 90 percent of Kentucky's farm people in the last two decades.

Little Rock

By Mrs. Perry Vice

Before me is a "First Reader Called Country Life". It was written several years ago by Miss Cora Wilson Stewart, founder of the Moonlight Schools of Rowan county. I have forgotten how the book came into my possession though it was probably used as supplementary to the adopted text. However, in this little book are two pictures of roads. One winding with soft moonlight through the countryside, the pastoral beauty being restful scene, and peaceful to those who traveled the road by the neatly kept roadside and beautiful shade trees which adorned the highway. This is what it said below the picture

"This is a Road"

It is a good Road

It will save my time

It will save my team

It will save my region

I will work for the good road."

The second picture might be described as follows. Winding through the country side was a narrow trail full of loose sharp rocks, chug holes, mud and water. A mud dining two horses and a new top buggy is seen trying bravely to dodge the worst places. One of the horses was submerged in the mud and water almost halfway to its knees. Weeds and bushes grew profusely along the trail obstructing the view of fields beyond and the fences were tumbled and broken. This is what it said below this picture

"See this Bad Road!

Don't waste my time

It will hurt my team

It will hurt my wagon

The bad road is my foe

I will get rid of the bad road."

These reasons are still just as true as they were years ago in the horse and buggy days only more so now in the expensive motor car era. Not only are good roads necessary better business, time and money saving reasons, it adds comfort and happiness and better home life to those who have chosen that particular community to reside.

This all leads me to think about a particular road where childhood days were spent—that road which leads from the Bourbon and Nicholas County Bridge to East Union along Hinkston and Somerset Creeks. This road as we recall was always rough and narrow with weeds and bushes growing profusely along the roadside. This led to the Wilson School that is so dear in memory to many. After all these years it is still not a road but a jotted trail that is a terror to all who must travel it.

To me it will always be associated with the dearest of childhood memories and my interest is sincere in hoping that the good people who live on this particular road in a day far different from that long ago because of modern transportation, will get the road through—a road over which they can travel with some degree of comfort and which they so badly need and richly deserve.
