Kentucky Law Bans Sale Of Game Fish

Peddlers of fish in the outskirts of cities and prospective buyers were warned by the Division of Game and Fish today that it is illegal to sell or purchase game fish in Kentucky.

The warning came as a result of reports that these peddlers, who usually sell fish which they represent as having been taken in Kentucky, most often sell out-of-state game fish. If classified as a game fish, regardless of from where it came, sale or purchase is banned by Kentucky Statutes.

The Division pointed out that only license required by the Division in the sale of fish is a wholesalers license. These peddlers are classified as retailers, and are therefore immune to action by the Division.

The Division points out that its conservation officers check these men often, but none have yet been found selling game fish. Most of the fish sold in this manner come from the Great Lakes region, the Division claims, and are not fish taken from Kentucky waters as the sellers so often claim.

Graves county 4-H'ers will show approximately 70 head of cattle at the district dairy show.

Farmers Pleased With Painted Mail Boxes

Farmers living along Tompkinsville Route 3 in Monroe county are looking with pride on the 200 newly painted and stenciled rural mail boxes which extend along a 27-mile stretch of highway. With the cooperation of the box holders in placing boxes on good posts, and of 4-H club members in helping with the painting and stenciling of names, the women have completed a worthy project.

Rearranged Kitchen Saves Walking Miles

Mrs. Marvin Wells of Muhlenberg county figures that for 55 and some careful planning and work, she is saving herself several miles of walking every year. It came about as a result of a study in the Belton Homemakers Club on making kitchen work easier.

The first step was a careful study of her kitchen. Then a seldom used door was closed to make more wall space available, and the refrigerator moved to the right of the kitchen cabinet. This gave easy access to supplies in the refrigerator. Mrs. Wells estimated these changes saved her at least 60 steps a day.

To make baking day easier, she stored flour, sugar and meal in a partitioned drawer in the cabinet while spices and other baking supplies were placed in six racks made to hang on the cabinet doors. Cake and pie tins and bread pans were placed in a file arrangement made by putting several partitions in a deep drawer.

The convenience of the dish cup board appeals particularly to this homemaker, for with the addition of several half-shelves, she can reach any desired piece without having to move others. Even the storage space in the stove was improved when shelves were made to hold skillets and other equipment used there.

Bourbon Vote Fraud Case On Way To Jury

The Bourbon county vote-fraud case will go to the jury today (Thursday).

Edward F. Prichard Jr. did not take the stand in his own defense before testimony ended at 1:00 p. m. Wednesday. His law partner and co-defendant, A. E. Funk Jr., testified Tuesday.

Federal Judge H. Church Ford agreed to allow both the government and the defense one and one-half hours each for closing arguments Wednesday afternoon.

Judge Ford said he would prepare his instructions for the jury Wednesday night and would give the case to the jury when court convenes today.

In a brief session Wednesday afternoon, the defense closed its case with testimony by Prichard's wife.

Mrs. Prichard, who seemed only slightly nervous contradicted evidence as to where her husband was on the Fridays, Saturdays, Sundays and Mondays preceding the election.

In rebuttal the government introduced John Corte, FBI agent. Corte testified that on January 20 Funk told him, "You fellows will just have to get them (the handwriting samples) the hard way." He also said that on June 2 Funk told him he was glad the law on ballot-box stuffing had been changed and "the penalty was not as drastic as it had been."

Corte also quoted Funk as saying, "It worst cartel to want the most I'll get is a fine."

Who cheats who, asked Defense Attorney Leslie Morris formally asked for a directed verdict of not guilty for both defendants.

Judge Ford overruled the motion without hearing arguments.

Prichard and Funk are on trial for conspiracy to forge and vote 254 illegal ballots in 11 Bourbon county precincts during the presidential elections last November 2.
