SOCIAL SECURITY NOTES

Summer employment always presents a special problem to the Social Security Administration, according to R. A. Tweedy, manager of the Administration's office in Lexington.

"Students and other seasonal workers in industry and commerce need social security account numbers so that their employers may properly report their wages for social security purposes. Those who work part time are also covered by the system and should promptly show their social security card to their employers," he said.

However, Tweedy cautions students as well as others not to get a social security account number card until a job is definitely in sight. "Once a card is obtained, it should be kept in a safe place. It should be shown to each employer. The employer should copy the name and account number from the worker's social security card rather than trust the worker's memory. Each year thousands of social security account numbers are incorrectly or incompletely reported on social security tax returns," he said.

If you have lost your card, or if your name has been changed, through marriage or otherwise, you should contact your social security office for a duplicate card showing your new name. The Lexington office of the Social Security Administration is located in the Post Office building.
