Many Pests For Plant Growers

A host of insects and diseases that poster owners of nurseries and growers of plants and farmers are discussed in a new bulletin of the Agricultural Experiment Station of the University of Kentucky.

In the list are Japanese beetle, white-fringed beetle, red spider, bag worm, pine needle scale, esonymus scale, root knot nematodes and grasshoppers.

To prevent further spread of insects and diseases, it is unlawful to sell or offer for sale uninspected or uncertified nursery stock. Applications for inspection should be made to State Entomologist, Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, Lexington.

Light Hogs Make Best Home Meat

Well-fattened hogs weighing 200 to 225 pounds are the best for home butchering, says Grady Sellards of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics, University of Kentucky. Their cuts are better and they are easier to handle than heavy hogs.

Proper chilling of the carcass was stressed by Sellards. This can be done in a locker plant, or in a refrigerator, or by packing in ice and salt. For top-quality meat, pork must be well chilled.

Sellards suggested a mild cure for bacon, using three pounds of salt, a pound and three-quarters of sugar and five ounces of saltpeter. Leave in the cure three weeks. Then smoke until cherry red on the skin side, wrap and store in a dry, cool place.

To cure hams, use a mixture of 2½ pounds of salt, 2½ pounds of sugar and two ounces of saltpeter, well rubbed in. Leave in the cure three weeks if the ham weighs 20 pounds or less, and a day and a half a pound for heavier hams.

Remove ham from cure, wash and smoke with green hickory until cherry red on skin side. Then wrap with heavy paper and store in cloth bags. Shoulders should be cured the same way.

High-Producing Herd

During the last test year, the 16-cow herd of registered Holstein Friesians owned by the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station at Lexington produced an average of 405 pounds of butterfat and 11,505 pounds of milk, in the official herd improvement registry program of The Holstein-Friesian Association of America. Milking was done twice daily.

Fescue Seeded Helps Pastures

Goodman Bros. of Breckinridge county will soon have 500 acres seeded to Ky. 31 fescue. They recently bought a 300-acre farm near Kingswood, Indiana. Agent Kenneth A. Brabant. Gullys were filled with a bulldozer and trees in fields cut down. Then applications of lime, rock prosphate and fertilizer were made and crop land seeded to fescue and Ladino clover. One hundred acres were left in timber. Two hundred acres of fescue had previously been seeded on the home farm, and another 100 acres of leased land will also be sowed to this crop.

Better Breeding Means More Milk

Milk production in Estill county has increased at least 30 percent since farmers are using purebred sires on grade cows. Improvement started about four years ago when six or eight registered Holstein sires were bought by farmers in several communities. Farm Agent Fred Brockman estimates that the average production of milk and butterfat will be more than doubled within the next five years.
