Achievements And Problems

The achievements of American medicine are outstanding. We have better medical care than any other major nation. And, in a very short period of time, we have made dramatic progress in reducing the financial shock that comes with illness. Some 100,000,000 people are now covered by some form of voluntary health insurance.

The medical fraternity and the other groups which work in the field of health are justly proud of these striking gains. But they aren't sitting back on their laurels and acting as if all was fair weather on the medical scene. Instead, they are working intensively on some difficult problems which are yet to be solved.

One of these lies in the fact that, as a result of our excellent medical care combined with generally superior living and working conditions, the average person's life expectancy is increasing at a rapid rate. It looks now as if one eighth of our population will be past 65 by 1980. Old people are naturally much more susceptible to illness than the younger. Studies and experiments now underway are designed to find sound ways and means to meet the costs of health insurance in old age.

Another complex problem is that of chronic, or catastrophic, illness, which may incapacitate a person for years on an entire lifetime. Here again a major difficulty lies in the cost of providing protection. And here again the interested groups are hard at work and are confident of success.

No one would expect such problems to be solved overnight. But it is important to realize that they are being worked out within the framework of our free society without the use of compulsion, without subjecting the taxpayers to the staggering load that socialized medicine or any variant it would involve, and without undermining the independence, rights and self-respect of doctor and patient.

Free Enterprize

All of us hear much about free enterprise. But it's a hard thing to describe.

Secretary of Commerce Weeks recently offered an excellent definition, saying: "Free, private enterprise is an economic system of the people, by the people, for the people. It is the instrument invented, developed and used by the people themselves to reward themselves for their own individual effort and to give themselves the best in goods and services . . . The Secretary went on to say that, in the vast majority of instances, private enterprise can do a better job than government in keeping "the average family well-fed, well-clothed, well-housed, and provided with those extras which give us here the really abundant life."

Remember next time you hear someone advocating or defending socialism—whether it be in a comparatively small matter such as government-printed envelopes, sold at unfair competition with taxpaying private printers, or in a great matter such as government electric power, sold in unfair competition with the taxpaying utility industry. In either case the principle is the same—and equally bad.

Tidbits Of Kentucky Folklore

"Sounds I Miss"

At a faculty party a few nights ago two of us old-timers got to talking about some sounds that we used to know and now hear only by a kind of spirit ear. Every age has its memories, and I suppose people of that age come to associate many a tender memory with what's heard at another time might call unusual sounds beginning, how ever, I feel that some of us had some sounds in our experiences that are unknown to the younger generation.

The sound we talked about most on the night of the party was the sound of the bell on the Lancaster Bowling Green, pucket boats ran regularly on the Barren and Green Rivers. Almost every day a boat arrived or left. As the Barren is a very crooked river, it was necessary to whistle for every bend as well as for the landing itself.

I early became so familiar with the bends and the whistles. For a lots that I could follow a boat into the landing from as far down as I the bend as well as the whistles. "There is at Thomas's Landing. That's for the turn at Wilson's Bend." There it's at the mouth of Jennings creek. "Now we're almost to the landing. And when a boat left, I had this sound delightful to me even then as long as I am as I could hear the whistles. Sometimes, as the boat came in late and blowed for the pilot played a tune and 'set the woods ablaze' with it. Some of the notes rolled again and again from the steep cliffs along the river. Tennessee's "home of the Elfland faintly blowing." When we were in excursion on the boat, we were treated to a complete concert of parlour, piano and sentimental airs. But the boats are gone, except for a few tourist boats, which do their work very effectively but much less poetically.

Another sound I miss is bugs calling. Up until a very few years ago I could occasionally hear this doing it, but now I do not know of any master of the art, who still practices. While I could not remember vividly the music of bugs calling, I wrote for this column an account of the art and called by name the most artistic bugs I had ever heard or known. Fortunately, the old man was still living and got to hear my tribute. He is someone since his daughter wrote me one of the best fan letters this column has ever called forth. Her aged father had gone so nearly blind that he could not read my essays, but his daughter read it and they recalled the good old days when he owned a big lot of bugs and called them home in the evening, with a call so appealing that I boy wanted to come home. I wonder whether he has among his descendants any worthy successor to his musical bug-calling.

Many of you will probably recall the next sound I'miss. It wasn't a pleasant one, but it had a self-important that yet plainly it said, "Get out of the way and let some one run who can run." I refer, of course, to the raucous horn on old-fashioned cars. In the early days of the automobile it seemed to be thought that only harsh, raucous unpeasant sounds would make people clear the way. For a few years the none-makers got newer and newer, until even the few survivors of that time made more noise than the thousands that go by now.

The reason I miss those harsh noises is that I can recall how intolerable the sounds made the driver of the car. One of my brothers-in-law used to say that he could tell whether the owner was driving or some upstart youngster by the loudness and harshness of the horn. Horses heard that raucous sound and pricked up their ears if they had only known what was coming to their age-old grievance, they probably would have cut up some shines and made the drivers of the cars afraid.

Maybe it was some dumb reasoning such as this that prompted a mule to charge down a lane and right over a T-model Ford some years ago, scaring the two women in the car half out of their wits and injuring the mule until it had to be shot. Anyway, the smart-alecky sound of an old car horn brings memories of days not too long ago by the calendar but nearly as far away as steamboats, so far as old-summers is concerned.

"In Ky." Features Bridges, River Travel In State

Pictures of Kentucky's 15 bridges across the Ohio River will be a main feature of the Winter issue of IN KENTUCKY, the Commonwealth's official magazine, which will be out this week. One of the spans, George Rogers Clark Memorial Bridge, Louisville, is on the front cover.

Also featured will be a story on river transportation in Kentucky which includes a description of port facilities. Each of the state's main streams is treated in this report of present traffic and the outlook for the future.

Other articles include a story on Cumberland Gap's famous big gun, "Long Tom" by Dr. Robert L. Kincaid, president of Lincoln Memorial University, an account of a twenty-th century Daniel Boone's tour of Kentucky, new developments in the tobacco oil fields, announcement of completion of the land use map prepared by the State Agricultural and Industrial Development Board, and the story of the T. B.-fighting Kentucky Mountain Club of Lexington.

Seventy-five more Franklin county girls have joined 4-H clubs this year than last, bringing the current total to 425 members, according to Mrs. Jeannette H. Year, home demonstration agent. Many of the girls are taking two projects, sewing being the first choice, followed by foods.

Despite drought, a large number of tobacco beds in Boyle county were prepared this fall by burning, steaming or use of gas.

Please Woods of Dryhill was the only Leslie county farmer to complete the corn derby, with an acre yielding 94 bushels.

Hospital Menus Include Turkey

It will be turkey and the usual trimmings for the patients in Kentucky's six tuberculosis and four mental hospitals at Christmas dinner.

Executive Director Joe D. Miller of the State Tuberculosis Sanatoria Commission and Dr. Frank M. Gaines, commissioner of Mental Health made similar announcements about Christmas menus Monday. In addition to the special meals, local civic and church groups will provide entertainment.

Miller said a large percentage of the patients in his hospital will be given Christmas leave to spend the holidays with their families.

The Christmas menu for the patients at the tuberculosis hospitals, at Hazelwood, Paris, Glasgow, Ashland, Madisonville and Louisville, will include, in addition to turkey and sage dressing, chilled tomato juice, whipped potatoes, fresh green beans, olives, mixed nuts, celery, cranberry salad, rolls, butter, hot mince pie, coffee and milk.

Menus for the mental hospitals, at Hopkinsville, Lakeland, Lexington and Danville have not been announced but they are expected to be similar to those for the tuberculosis hospitals.

Gives Recipe For H'makers Sausage

Home-made sausage is one of the compensations of butchering. The meat should be about three-fourths lean and one-fourth fat, the seasonings being sprinkled over the meat before it is ground. Two grindings, first with a coarse plate and then with a finer one, will distribute the seasonings well and make a good blend of fat and lean.

In a recent circular from the University of Kentucky, "Hog Killing and Cutting and Curing of Meat," this recipe is given for a mild sausage: 6 pounds of meat, 3 tablespoons of salt, 2 tablespoons of black pepper and 1 tablespoon of sage.

If a spicier sausage is desired, ¼ teaspoon of ground cloves or 1-16 teaspoon ground nutmeg may be added, with 1-16 teaspoon of sugar.

Copies of the above circular, No. 458, may be had from offices of the county agents or from the Experiment Station, Lexington.

Weekly Recipe

Here is a thin, crisp cookie that adds variety to the Christmas collection of goodies. Mrs. Pearl Wade of the University of Kentucky says a secret of success is having them rolled very thin.

This Sugar Cookies

½ c. butter
1 c. sugar
1 egg
1 T. cream
½ t. vanilla
2 c. flour
½ t. salt
1 t. baking powder

Cream butter and sugar until very light. Add well-beaten egg, cream and vanilla. Sift flour, baking powder and salt. Add cream mixture and blend well. Chill several hours. Roll out a small quantity at a time until it is very thin on a lightly floured board. Cut with small cookie cutter. Decorate as desired or sprinkle with colored sugar. Bake on a greased sheet in a moderate oven for about 5 minutes.

Note: To decorate Christmas cookies quickly bake them first, then brush with slightly-beaten egg white diluted with 1 teaspoon of water. Hold the cookie at an angle over the dish of colored sugar and sprinkle on the amount desired. As the egg white dries, the sugar will cling.
