MANY PASTURES MAY BE RESEEDED

Because of drought, many pastures and meadows will probably be seeded in Kentucky this spring The Agricultural Experiment Station, University of Kentucky, recommends the following grasses for seeding:

Ky. 31 tall fescue; Ky. Select orchard grass, Southland, Achenbach, Elsberry and Lincoln Smooth bromegrass. Marietta timothy; and Piper and Tift Sudan grasses.

Inquiries Total 119,000 in 1953

Requests for tourist information received here by the Division of Publicity last year totaled more than 119,000, according to a report made today by Director Mark Sisk.

The figure is an increase from about 117,000 received during 1952 and more than doubles the number received in 1950, when inquiries totaled 54,000.

Requests directly attributable to advertising placed by the division accounted for 83,000 of last year's total. Coupons from ads carried in newspapers and magazines, throughout the nation came from every state and many foreign countries.

During the year, the division placed advertising in 28 metropolitan newspapers, five national magazines and all leading outdoor magazines, in addition to advertising carried by Kentucky newspapers and radio stations.

Requests other than those resulting from ads included inquiries from automobile clubs and other organizations, letters from other information seekers and requests received from patrons at travel shows where the division sponsored exhibits.

4-H Forestry Can Earn Rewards

Give a sturdy Kentucky lad an axe, a saw and a woodlot to use them in. Then add expert guidance and put it all into a 4-H club forestry project for the record.

This formula will send a Blue Grass 4-H member to Chicago for the National Club Congress next fall and might win him a $300 college scholarship.

"Kentucky now has, for the first time, a solid ladder of rewards for the 4-H boy to climb while gaining an understanding of woodlot forestry," said C. D. Dooker, Louisville, chairman of the Kentucky Forest Industries Committee.

He said recent action by industries, landowners and the University of Kentucky set up new state and county awards. Wood-dependent industries have sponsored the program nationally since 1948 through American Forest Products Industries. The industry committee represents AFPI in the state.

Mr. Dooker announced that national, sectional and state awards again will be given by AFPI. These are: national—four $300 scholarships; sectional—six trips to Chicago; state—gold medals.

The Kentucky winner also will receive a trip to Chicago paid for by Keep Kentucky Green supported by industry to promote forest fire prevention in the state.

Champions of 12 to 14 eastern counties will have a free week this summer at the state's first 4-H forestry camp at Robinson Forest near Jackson. It will be sponsored by the university and leading forest industries.

Objectives of the contest are to develop appreciation of forest resources, to acquaint future landowners with the value of well-managed woodlots, to encourage good forestry practices, and to promote protection from grazing and fire prevention.

Mr. Dooker said the 220,000 farm forests reported for Kentucky in the 1950 census should offer ample opportunity for farm youths to practice forestry for profit.

A recent survey showed 5,350,000 acres of woodlands on Kentucky farms, with the average woodlot 30 acres. This is 48 percent of all forestland in the state.

Information of 4-H forestry is available at county extension offices, from club leaders, and from the Agricultural Extension Service, University of Kentucky, Lexington.

Small Grains May Need Spring Care

A statement from the College of Agriculture and Home Economics, University of Kentucky, says drought and high costs of production may make extra care of small grain advisable this spring.

Top-dressing with fertilizers will usually return dividends, says the college, under the following conditions: Land that is low in productivity—less than 30 bushels of wheat or 45 bushels of barley or oats an acre; small grain with winter injury; late-seeded grain and late-germinating stands; over-grazed grain; soils that tend to be droughty; thin stands and grain for pasture.

Twenty-five Clark county 4-H club members received a $15,961 for 35 fat calves, including premium money won at shows.

Fertilizing with anhydrous ammonia gave S. G. LaMond of McCracken county an increase of 15 to 30 bushele of corn an acre.
