West Homemakers

By Mrs. W. M. Kendall

Some of the accomplishments attained by the Carlisle West Homemakers during the past year are given below.

Less than 20 active homemakers of our club have been interested in the various projects and with the help of our trained project leaders much has been done to make life greater happiness in our homes both socially and economically.

It is estimated that we have been able to save at least one-third of the cost of all articles made.

Tid Bits Of Kentucky Folklore

By Dr. Gordon Wilson

"WORDS AND IDEAS"

Many of the notebooks that I touch on read spend a lot of time talking about words and ideas, there is always a call for writers who are forever talking about words, especially words that deal with people of some sort. There are whole chapters about "charged" words, that is, words that produce an emotion when they are used; some writers even use "loaded" words, when they refer to ideas that are nearly always associated with certain words, whether they are in sentences or in a dictionary or on a signboard. Some words are such words as "Communism," "fascist," "democracy," and "atheism." I am sometimes afraid that we are drifting back to the primitive thinking of the Greeks, namely, that things have certain names because those are their names naturally. Of course, neither the ancient Greek nor anyone could not, conceive of a word as having any importance except as it was used in the language. Even the most learned Greeks never guessed that there were other languages that were related to the Greek language and that were much old and "pure," whereas that word might mean. I have begun to feel that our changing vocabulary makes it seem impossible to interpret words that used to be, even words that everybody who was anybody knew as well as he knew his own name. But times have changed, and new words have come on to name the same ideas, and younger people often forget the queer ways older people had of saying things, even the poets and philosophers.

Not long ago one of my friends, who modestly did not sign his name, sent me a big list of things that he wanted me to try on my freshmen. The items were such as those I knew, almost painlessly when I was a boy. Only a few of them were more isolated than the vocabulary that I knew. But the rest had to do with farm life of a generation ago, when farm life was been easy picking for boys of my age. I have mentioned several of these words in various articles lately and would like to see some more, thanks to my anonymous friend. He suggested that I give an examination on these and similar words. Just imagine yourself taking such an examination.

What is a "bumper pole"? Come, now, no fooling. Did you ever hear a heavy load of lumber or sandy manure, over difficult roads? Well, did you ever tie a leg chain around your hind and then tighten it by inserting a hickory pole and turning it as far around as possible and tying it down? Maybe you know what "juggles" are? When crosstracking was one of the major industries of our neck of the woods, there were always many of these things that were left over after the ties had been hewed out. Where the name came from I do not know. The Greeks would have said that the word just belonged, that no other word would do.

Now, what is "hay"? I used to find the word in the King James version of the Bible and was somewhat surprised to notice that it apparently meant grass or some such stuff, just as it did when it was used by some of my oldest relatives. We younger generation said "grass," feeling thoroughly up-to-date; the oldsters were quite as self-sufficient on their side of the older word. By and by our word prevailed, and the old one disappeared except in dialect dictionaries or on the lips of the very old and very sentimental. I am pretty sure that many a child in my neighborhood wanted to laugh when the preacher read about hay.

It used to be very crude to mention the base, wearing apparel of babies. And yet it was natural for something to be said, sometimes. "Hippo" was one name word, brought over, I dare say, from Northern Ireland and Scotland by the pioneers. Many who used the word felt that they were avoiding the much commoner, and therefore crude, word. Children whom I knew often gave little-child versions of the word, so that it sounded perfectly harmless.

And so we might go on and on, showing how utterly childish the ancient Greeks were in believing that every object has one and only one name. Our grandchildren will probably ask some day "Grandpa, what was a flapper? Was Grandma one?"

The ninth annual Farm and Home Field Day in Trimble county will be held on the John Rand Farm on Aug. 10.

Thirty-six homemakers in Grayson county have voted to form a county homemakers chorus.

The Garden

By John S. Gardner, University Of Kentucky

The time for planting winter potatoes is now. If one is left with a supply to take the place of early planted Cobblers about Christmas time.

There are five varieties from which to choose: Kennebec, Katahdin, Sequoia, Irish Cobbler and the old-fashioned Judy potato.

Irish cobblers may be planted any time between July 25 and Aug. 10, but the others should be in the ground by July 15, as they need a longer time for maturing.

The Judy potato should be halved to build all the soil moisture there is.

Use land that has been kept fallow since breaking late April, utilizing weeds as they sprout. This will keep moisture and weed cultivation to the very late.

2—Plow at least 10 inches deep. The furrows should be 3 feet apart for enough to keep them from closing up.

3—The fertilizer should be 4-12-8 or thereabouts; the rate, I would say, 2,000 pounds per acre. Keep 100 pounds of seed to an equal amount of fertilizer; or about 1,000 pounds per acre. Keep the fertilizer low in the furrow to cover the roots, down deep.

4—Use certified seed treated with Semesan Bel, following directions and using nonarsenic or any other spore treaters, dust them with lumber, about 10 ounces to the 100 pounds seed-piece decay that causes spotted stands. Seed pieces should be cut back to the spring, no less than 1½ ounces up to 2 ounces.

5—Cut deep, deeply, fall 5 inches. Covered that deeply and level, cultivation can be level, but dirg hills toward the rows to keep the clove any soil cracks.

6—Plant from 9 to 12 in the only cool and dew-wet soil touches the seed pieces.

Tobacco Farmers Warned Against Use Of Toxaphene

An urgent warning to farmers against the use of toxaphene on tobacco crops has been issued by the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

"Toxaphene is an injurious insecticide, according to an official of one of the larger tobacco companies, that renders tobacco practically unsmokable and unmarketable purposes because of its odor and taste, even in small amounts," said Raymond Hunt, UK tobacco specialist. "Even when used on small plants, it can be detected a year before the crop is planted, toxaphene has a residual effect which will show up in the finished product, to the dismay of manufacturer, although it is not evident on the crop on the hoeing.

"Unless farmers realize the danger to tobacco through toxaphene and use other materials to control insects, there is danger of destroying the tobacco market in Kentucky," said Mr. Hunt. "Tobacco provides about 40 percent of the crop income in the state. We urge farmers to recognize the facts and avoid using toxaphene on any tobacco plants." he stated.

Other insecticides are equally effective in killing grasshoppers and hornworms, and without unpleasant results, it was pointed out. Aldrin, Chlordane, and Endrin are effective against grasshoppers, hornworms and flea beetles, including tobacco hornworms, including flea beetles.

Used as a spray or dust as recommended dosages, any of the above insecticides will leave no undesirable residue upon tobacco, but do impair the odor, taste of aroma of the cured product.

Foreign Youths Visit Kentucky

The first two of 12 BFYE (International Farm Youth Exchangees) expected to visit Kentucky this summer have arrived and are on their best behavior, according to the University of Kentucky 4-H Club Department, local sponsor of the program.

Pentti Laubberg of Finland will spend the first two weeks of his visit in the state at the farm of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Newsom of Pike county, while Miss Hildegard Spieks of Germany is with Mr. and Mrs. Hudson Roberts of Floyd county. Both of the visitors will live on farms in other counties at no, the average visit being from two to three weeks.

According to the BFYE plan, exchangees are given the opportunity of becoming family members, participating in all family activities, taking part in all activities of the family in order that they learn the American way of life.

Mr. Lindeberg, consultant to the Association of Farmers' Guilds in Finland, was graduated in agriculture from the University of Helsinki, and speaks five languages. A former 4-H club member, he grew up on a farm where dairying and forestry were the principal farming interest. While in Kentucky, he hopes to learn about the projects carried by 4-H club boys, the management of 4-H camps, and how leaders are obtained.

Miss Spieks has had two years of home economics training and has worked on farms for her home economics apprenticeship. Her special interests while in the United States include a study of the extension home economics program, farm-family life, rural youth programs and information on poultry production. She is preparing to be an adviser or teacher of home economics.

Any farm families desiring to cooperate by sharing their homes in this international program for a period of understanding and friendly relationship between the young people of different countries may contact their county or home demonstration agent or Mr. Dorothy Gentry, 4-H Club Department, Experiment Station, Lexington, Ky.

At the close of the year's visit, Kentucky 4-H Club members, who contributed 126 handmade rugs, about half that were made in the country.

Use Of Sudan Grass Shows Big Increase

The use of Sudan grass for summer or emergency pasture has increased 20-fold over previous years in Carlisle county, according to J. R. Dunn, county agent with the University of Kentucky. Previously, a few farmers seeded an average of less than 50 acres per year. This year, 150 farmers will sow more than 1,000 acres in their efforts to have a drought resistant pasture and, at the same time, save as much leguminous acreage as possible for hay and seed crops.

About 75 farmers reported they plan to harvest some of a mixture of corn and sorghum for silage this fall.

Forestry Program Promoted In Floyd

An educational program on forestry is being planned in Floyd county in order to combat the losses incurred annually through fire and insect damage, according to Sidney Ousley, Extension Forester, Lexington.

Schools, newspapers, radio stations and other agencies are operating with James Newman, field agent in forestry, the county agent and other forestry leaders in showing farmers how timber can be made to supplement the farm income through good management practices.

Dry Years Creates Interest In Ponds

Inquiries received at the University of Kentucky indicate widespread interest in farm ponds as a result of three dry years.

Agricultural engineers say ponds are the most economical and practical way to store large amounts of water on farms. They recommend ponds at least a quarter of an acre in size and 6 feet deep. This would be 1½ acre-feet of water. For more water, increase the depth rather than the area of the pond, it is advised.

In locating a dam, the engineers note that there must be sufficient water to fill the pond and replenish it during a drought. The watershed should contain at least 5 acres for each acre-foot of water stored in the pond.

The pond should be so located that it can be constructed economically. It should be located adequate water. A depression with wide shallow sides is more less fill-material in the dam. The nearer level the slope of ground behind the dam, the more will be the water storage capacity.

The dam should be made of soil that will hold water. Sandy Clay soil is desirable. Autcropping of rock and soft soils should be avoided, and to prevent the pond filling with sediment, trees should be no cultivated crops in the watershed. If a masonry spillway is not provided to divert excess water, the spillway should be well sodded.

If need to hold water for irrigation, the pond should be near the fields to be irrigated. For cattle or other stock, it should be fenced and the water piped to a tank beyond the fence.

Ask your county agent for Kentucky Extension Circular 470, "Farm Dams for Farm Ponds."

Daviess Farmer Shows Ingenuity

R. C. Murphy of Daviess county converted a horse-drawn tobacco setter into a tobacco transplanter from a corn planter into a tobacco transplanting machine, reported Floyd I. Thompson, senior assistant county agent with the University of Kentucky. The fertilizer applicator is so arranged as to hand fertilizer on each side of the tobacco row, the tobacco setter being raised or lowered with the tractor's hydraulic system.

The Senior-High 4-H Club of Simpson county is sponsoring the placement of 4-H signs on principal highways in the county.

Wheat Rates Very From $2.34 To $2.39 A Bushel

Rates varying by counties from $2.34 to $2.39 a bushel will be available to Kentucky farmers who apply for price supports on their 1954 crop wheat. There will be a discount of four cents a bushel for red winter wheat.

Chairman James R. Rash Jr., of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation State Committee, said the normal 30-day waiting period required for loans on farm-stored small grain was waived because of the generally good condition of grains at harvest time.

Loans and purchase agreements on wheat are available through next Jan. 31.

Improves Mail Boxes

The Paint Lick Homemakers Club of Garrard county cooperated with the rural mail carriers in the community in sponsoring a contest for the improvement of rural mail boxes. Members also said markers for the boxes, adding to their treasury for carrying on other projects, said Mrs. Berry C. Ball, UK home demonstration agent.
