Your Memory.

On Monday morning last I left Uncle Sam for this place, and as I have to furnish you copy for next week's paper, I know of nothing that would prove more interesting than some observations upon the "Father of our Country."

I came here from Cincinnati over the old Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and I was not only charmed by the magnificent scenery along the route, but my mind was refreshed by the many historical points passed. To the student of Indian history what could be more refreshing than a ride through the great Miami Valley and by the city of Indianatown sitting along the upper Ohio river. Where the red men once lived in their bone and the red women worked and labored, now live the most prosperous people on the earth. The Mason Valley is one great corn field, many miles wide and many miles long. Then other fields of wheat, and the most luxuriant meadows we view the great Ohio river, with the wife and child Potomac wending, twisting and pouring over her shallow and rocky bed, the mind goes back to the days of John Smith and Powhatan and the armies of thousand Indians contesting every inch of heritage. A view of this historical valley to one who loves to think over the past is a treat worth the trip. Then we come to Harper's Ferry. Who would refuse seeing their grand Rocky away skyward, with flowing and overhanging rocks that seem to leave here or in their places when seen as the mind
